HILLSBORO CLAIMS TO BE DRY CAPITAL

WAS HOME OF CRUSADERS NOW AN IMPORTANT FACTOR

Rev. Ewing, Former Pastor, Lands Big Plum As Illinois Administrator—Roy Haynes While National Commissioner Favored Many of His Townspeople—Westerville In the Background.

Hillsboro has gained a lap on Westerville in the race for prohibition capital of United States. Hillsboro got control of the state of Illinois and southern Wisconsin, including Milwaukee, when General Lincoln C. Andrews announced Rev. R. E. Ewing former pastor of the United Brethren church of that village, would continue as administrator for the Illinois district.

Hillsboro, which boasts of 4356 inhabitants, is the county seat of Highland county. Its rival, Westerville, is in Franklin county and holds about half as many persons—280.

Westerville long had the lead thru its possession of the headquarters of the Anti-Saloon League of America. Then appeared Roy Asa Haynes in the capacity of U. S. prohibition commissioner. He was from Hillsboro, and since that time the south, so far as Ohio is concerned, has been in the saddle.

The peculiar situation in which two villages, little known to the people in general, have struggled for leadership in the moral uplift of the nation by sumptuary law, goes back many years. It was in 1873 that the women of Hillsboro decided to close up the saloons of that town. Their method was unusual. Led by Rev. William McSurely they went to each saloon in the village and prayed before it. For days they kept it up until one by one all of the liquor dealers submitted closed up their shops and quit.

It was known as the woman's crusade. It spread to other towns until all southern Ohio was affected. The movement resulted eventually in the formation of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, which grew until its branches covered the nation and eventually the world.

Later the Anti-Saloon League was created to bring business methods into dry struggle. Its headquarters were established at Westerville and that village became the gathering center of dry forces.

But down in Hillsboro, Haynes was conducting and editing a county seat paper. Early in 1920 he began a native son cry of Warren G. Harding for president. Some say he was the original Harding for president man. After the Harding administration went onto office, Haynes was taken from the Ohio hills to become first commissioner under the provisions of the Volstead act. His salary of $7,500 a year was a matter of much comment in Hillsboro.

Since Haynes went into office, a comparative large number of Hillsboro persons also have gone into offices of jobs in the dry enforcement work. Ewing was among the first. He left the ministry of the church, not the largest in Hillsboro as they are mostly Methodists or Presbyterians down there, to become a field worker and lecturer for prohibition and assistant to Haynes.

Another who entered the service was William H. Walker. Mr. Walker had been county clerk of the courts. He also had been at various times tax inquisitor, state oil inspector, village marshal and village policeman. He was road contractor and bridge builder and grain and stock broker and had been engaged in several other private business enterprises, none of which was particularly successful. Walker is chief assistant to Ewing in the Illinois dry work.

H. H. Miller, owner of a Hillsboro drug store, joined the dry army. Recruited with him were Lyman Turner who had been a farmer, auto livery man and picture show owner, James E. McDermott, who was railroad agent Frank L. Lemon, who was county school teacher and holder of many miner political jobs, and Ewing Newby, county commissioner, deputy sheriff and threshing machine operator; Leslie J. Hoyt, Albert Feike and David B. Head.

This article started out to show how Hillsboro gained a lap on Westerville in getting control of prohibition enforcement in Illinois. But it was not a full lap. Ewing, altho a Hillsboro man, now was graduated from Otterbein college at Westerville.

Chimney Waste Checked
Most of the old-fashioned furnaces and many of the later designs lost a large percentage of their heat through the chimney. Electrical engineers are now beginning to check this waste with new devices. To date they have succeeded in converting into energy 93 per cent of the heat units of the fuel used.

"Now, Mose, doesn't your conscience hurt you?"

"Yes, it do. If I has any luck I'll leave you a nice mess of fish."

DEATH OF FORMER RESIDENT

Charles Franklin Clark, son of Robert Clark and Sarah (Crosby) Clark, was born August 6th, 1879, in Vinton County, Ohio, and died in Columbus, Ohio, August 16th, 1925, aged 46 years and 10 days. He was united in marriage with Miss Mamie Krug on July 23rd, 1908, from which union one child, Robert Calvin, was born, who, with the mother, survives to mourn their loss. He is also survived by one brother, W. A. Clark, of Circleville, Ohio, and two sisters, Mrs. Jennie Smitley, of Fort Wayne, Indiana, and Mrs. Lillie Morrison, Adelphi, Ohio.

Mr. Clark was a man among men, who was very much loved by his fellow employees. His disposition was always of the very best nature and he was a man who never complained and no job was too difficult to master. His loss to the fellow employees and employer is deeply felt and he will always be missed and never forgotten.

IS STILL RIDING THE RANGES AT 95

Mangum Is Oldest Cowboy in Active Service.

Childress, Tex.—Supple as a youth in muscle, vigorous and hearty, H. R. Mangum, ninety-five years old, is still riding the range on the big ranch of the Smith Brothers, near here. He is said to be the oldest cowboy still in active service in the country. Mangum has been a cow hand ever since he came to Texas from South Carolina, three-quarters of a century ago. He knows the history of more ranches in this state than any other person. He was well along toward middle life when the famous Chisholm trail was established. He went up the trail with herds of cattle many times. In his early life he worked on ranches in the southern part of Texas. As the wild lands of the more western parts of the state were opened up he went with the venturesome cattlemen into their new grazing territory. He was upon the frontier when Indian raids were common and when buffaloes populated the unbroken region by countless thousands.

Mangum says that he has observed no set of rules of living. He "went the usual paces" of a cowboy in the stirring early days and has devoted himself to hard work and life in the open air.

A Threat

"I done my durnedest," said the salesman of the Right Place store in Petunia, "but I couldn't make the feller buy that suit o' clothes."

"You couldn't, eh?" sneered the proprietor of the emporium. "Well, if you don't sell it to somebody within the next two weeks I'll sell it to you and take it out of your wages, and you can wear it yourself."—Kansas City Star

RADIO CHATS WITH POWEL CROSLY JR.
HOW many tubes are necessary in a radio set is a question frequently asked. To get the answer to this and other questions, the Milwaukee Journal made a survey of the so-called Greater Milwaukee Radio Market. The answers to questionnaires used showed that thirty-five per cent of all the radio sets owned in the city were three-tube sets.

THE public is gradually beginning to comprehend that the number of tubes in a set has nothing to do with the results obtained. Better results may be obtained with a one-tube set than with a five-tube, depending, of course, upon the circuit.

THE comparison has been drawn between radio and motor cars. It has been said that originally automobiles were one and two cylinder cars, then followed the four, six, eight, and finally the twelve. There are those who contend that the eight is the last word in motor construction. There are those, of course, who disagree. But the point is made that as the motor car advanced the number of cylinders increased. But that has nothing to do with radio. Some manufacturers, to be sure, kept adding tubes and tubes, and hoped that the public would believe that by increasing the number of tubes you could better the results obtained. But it is not necessarily true. There are sets today which have but three tubes and do the work of six. There are single tube sets so constructed that they do the work of three.

The small tube sets are still in the great majority, not only because they are more economical, but also because the results are satisfactory.

Automatic Lacing

The interlocking steel lacing principle already applied to galoshes and tobacco pouches, now is being used for shoes. When such shoes are first bought, the laces are tightened to fit the foot. After that it is necessary merely to slide a key up or down to "lace" or "unlace" the shoe. The automatic lacer is placed on the side of the shoe, which otherwise resembles the regular article.

Motor Trucks in China

The rapid increase in the use of motor trucks and machines in China during the last ten years, reports to the Department of Commerce show, has resulted in the steady and constantly rising growth of the gasoline trade. The total imports in 1923 amounted to 6,365,000 gallons as compared with the 1914 figures of 823,000 gallons.

Homes of Rare Birds

Birds of paradise are found in New Guinea, Molucca Islands, and a few other neighboring islands, also in north-eastern Australia. Egrets range from the United States south to southern South America, from Central Europe south to Southern Africa and from North Central Asia south to Australia.

The descendants of Diana and the fair followers of Sir Izaak Walton are sometimes overshadowed by the more spectacular feats of the Glennas and the Joyces, the Helens and the Suzannes, yet despite their comparative lack of publicity the cults of rod and gun are numerically greater than ever in the past. Long before then, writes a fashion correspondent in the New York Herald-Tribune, May Sutton went boldly into Wimbledon and brought a championship back with her, long before women were regarded as anything but a decorative background on links and courts, hunting and fishing, riding, canoeing, swimming and camping were regarded as the exclusive hallmarks of the sportsman. In later years the term has taken on a new connotation to the end that what is now known as the sports dress—intended for golf, tennis and the fair looker-on—bears little relation to the exhilarative life of the wide open spaces and would never be appropriate for the whilom journeys back to nature.

Which, perhaps, is just as well. The nature-loving girl who spends patient hours fighting the speckled trout, who sturdily paddles her own canoe through the quiet lakes of the great mountains, who pitches her tent wherever nightfall finds her, has ever been truculent under the restraining dicta of the mode. For many years she rejected the frilly decrees of Paris in favor of the conservative and eminently practical costumes of London. Nor could you blame her, for in its earliest versions the Paris rough sports frock completely missed the atmosphere. The thought that even the French couture would dare dictate what she should wear when she hunted or fished or paddled was sufficient in itself to seasonally alienate her from those estimable artists.

Light, however, has come to the maisons of the grande couture. Basing their designs upon the solid foundations of the practical English costume, they have added thereto the chic that is Paris, to the end that the French rough sports costume for the wide open spaces is now sufficiently practical for the most hide-bound Briton, and it incorporates in addition an essentially Parisian smartness. The creators themselves have wisely refrained from adding seasonal improvements solely in the name of style, and what changes do occur from time to time are made, apparently at least, in the name of practicality.

Dispense With the Skirt.

Many fishing costumes entirely dispense with the skirt and consist merely of a knee-length coat and trousers, the former buttoning high at the neck. Corduroy and covert suits frequently feature sleeveless jackets, in which event a cotton crepe shirtwaist is worn underneath. The cotton crepe shirtwaist, incidentally, is an invaluable adjunct to every rough sports excursion, inasmuch as it does not wrinkle readily, and in addition requires no ironing after it is laundered.

Canoeing and camping are sports closely akin to fishing and yet there are entirely different costumes designed for the devotees of paddle and tent. Naturally if you contemplate a trip which will embrace all three of these nature recreations, it would be advisable to choose the type which will occupy most of your time—but you will never feel uncomfortable if you interchange these costumes.

The effect of the camping suit is hardy and it must obviously be carried out in every detail. High-heeled shoes, silk stockings or vivid waists would hardly harmonize with the roughing-it atmosphere of the tenting-out costume, and must, of course, be carefully avoided. Yet the tendency toward rough clothes can also be easily overdone, and is by many women who spare no efforts in an endeavor to be natural, and achieve instead an unattractive plainness. The ideal outfit is neither inconspicuously ornate nor severely plain, but it strikes a happy compromise between the two.

English woollens are favored in the Paris-inspired camping clothes, generally in a dark-brown mixture, but the newest fabric idea on this side of the Atlantic is cotton covert cloth. This material has replaced khaki in many quarters and for obvious reasons. It is lighter in weight, far more pliable, and, greater than these, it is more adaptable to laundering. Then, too, it comes in attractive shades of green and rust as well as the characteristic brown range.

The Jacket-Knickers Suit.

The typical smart suit for camping, hiking and similar recreations consists of a jacket, knickers and a wrap-around skirt. In such a costume the jacket is a belted affair, single-breasted and with several patch pockets. The skirt, with its deep plait at the back, is slightly circular and wraps around the figure to fasten at the side front with three buttons. It is so constructed that it may be worn as a cape—a feature that will be found indispensable during the sudden rain-storm.

Canoeing costumes are divided into two categories—the outfit worn in the quiet seclusion of the mountain lake and that worn for the short paddle from the yacht club. For the first there is a smart plaid wool suit consisting of a tight-fitting jacket and knickers, both developed in a washable woolen material—beige plaided in green. The jacket, which greatly resembles a wind-breaker, has a knitted band of plain wool around the bottom and the knicker cuffs are trimmed in the same way. The high standing collar is frequently set off by a vivid four-in-hand tie that matches the kerchief headband of the wearer.

The formal canoeing suit is a much more colorful affair and is typically developed in washable flannel. Two styles lead all the rest—the jumper and the one-piece. This costume is always carefully designed to accommodate the large step which the wearer must make in stepping off the pier and into the boat—and the necessary freedom of motion is accomplished by means of skirt plaiting.

The Riding Habit.

The riding habit offers more diversification and comes nearer the heart of the mode than any other costume of the great outdoors. It has got to be smart, principally because it is frequently worn in urban places, and yet it must studiously avoid overelaboration. Long years ago the dashing figure of the early 1900's was portrayed in her most romantic moments dressed in a riding costume, and while the habit of years has changed the riding ladies have lost none of their ancient appeal.

The first choice of the modern horsewoman is whether she shall emulate the majestic Victorian or whether she shall canter forth in the masculine apparel that has acquired the stamp of modernism. The solution depends entirely upon the individual because both styles are equally in the good graces of the mode. Our personal preference is for the graceful Victorian costume, but the ultimate choice should depend upon type.

The typical riding habit, be it of the genre masculine or feminine, is characteristically cut along slightly fitted lines. The varying of sleeves is limited to the breeches suit—some of these have sleeves and others look equally attractive without. The suit may be developed entirely in a single material or it may utilize two. Among the dual combinations are flannel and linen and gabardine and pongee—gabardine and linen and flannel and pongee are equally acceptable. Melton, whipcord, English woollens and water-repellent tweeds are among other riding costume fabrics.

However, the key to the smart riding habit of 1925 will be found neither in fabric nor type, and not in the silhouette. Instead it will be noted in the opposing themes struck by costume and detail. Lay it at the door of a timorous couture, fearful of bizarre extremes, or the nicely balanced taste of the horsewoman herself, the fact remains that the mannish suit must have its feminizing accessories while the gentler habit requires the severe touch of masculine detail.

The time is passed when the measure of the value of a memorial is quantity. I hope the time has come when that measure is quality. I care not whether the material be marble or granite, its future will be measured by the character of the design. It is quality that has preserved for us the finest examples in painting and sculpture. It is quality that will stamp our imprint upon cemeteries of the future. Simplicity, correct lines and proportions and proper ornamentation are the real fundamentals. A design that is right, material that is lasting, and perfect workmanship, spells success for the future of this industry and the beautification of the cemetery. Will you let me help you select the memorial for your lot. Call at show room. NO AGENTS.

Crosley Radio News Service, Cinti. O.

ANY people believe the more tubes a radio has the better it is.

This is not so.

It is the way the tubes are used that counts.

Numerous manufacturers have to make five and six-tube sets because they do not own any patents or licenses that would permit them to get better results by using three tubes.

"Please Stand By" is a phrase not used at Station WLW in Cincinnati. A special microphone is used to tell the artist when to "prepare" and when to "broadcast," and through the use of the solo and ensemble studios, it permits a continuous program without interruption and making it unnecessary to ask the radio audience to "please stand by" while the studio is being arranged for the next number, as is the case when only one studio is available in a broadcasting station.

At this time of the year when broadcasting conditions are not as good as during the winter, it is a good plan to try all wire connections, to see that the ground wire and antennae are properly connected, that the battery connections are clean and tight, that the batteries are full strength, that the tubes are in good order—in brief, that your whole radio house is in good order.

With all connections O. K., and with batteries and tubes in good working order and assuming, of course, that the set itself is in good working condition, reception should be good. If you use wet batteries, keep them well charged. If you use dry batteries, test them frequently and don't delay in replacing a run-down battery.

Radio is now an all-year-round means of getting entertainment and education. In the summer time, when the outdoor calls, the radio can be taken out of doors too.

The saxophone was designed at the start to play religious music. Its somber tones were for serious things. In fact, Mendelssohn found it so mournful that he wouldn't allow it to be played in any of the orchestras he conducted.—Exchange.

Wales Credited With
Some Snappy Comeback

The prince of Wales is the hero of an anecdote that does credit to his wit. The prince was held up one September evening by a reporter in a New York night club.

"Sir," said the reporter hurriedly, "will you please tell me why, at your age, you are not yet married? Is it true that you were once engaged to the king of Italy's daughter and that the engagement was broken off? If so, what was the cause of the rupture? Would you like to marry an American girl? Would your parents be willing? What dowry?"

"Hold on," the prince interrupted. "You must first tell me your name, age and salary. Are you single, married or divorced? If divorced, what alimony do you pay? Do you really pay it? Ever been fired? If so, why? How did it feel the last time? State—"

But here, with an impatient laugh, the reporter turned and hurried from the night club.

Finds Guests Honest

At Pearsall, Texas, the sheriff of the county, H. L. Brooks, has put into operation a "help yourself" hotel and the guests appear to like it. The guests register without assistance, erasing from a nearby blackboard the number of the room they select. When they leave after a day or a month, they put the money to pay for their stay in an envelope and drop it into a locked box near the door. The hotel owner seldom appears, there is no cashier and servants give unobtrusive service. Mr. Brooks says he has been cheated out of only $2 thus far.

Lo the Wise Indian!

Big Chief Meyers, who caught for the New York Glans in the days when the battery of Mathewson and Meyers was famous, was—and still is—a remarkable man. Although a full-blooded Indian of one of the California mission tribes he is a college graduate and, what is rather unusual in a professional ball-player, an exceedingly well-informed lover of art, and he has a keen wit. His tribal name was Tortes. One day a curious person asked him why he had taken the name of John Meyers.

"It sounds so Indian," said Meyers. On another occasion a friend invited Meyers to tell him what his favorite pictures were.

"There are two that I particularly like," said the brawny Indian. "One is Abbey's mural painting, 'The Quest of the Holy Grail,' on the walls of the Boston public library. Whenever I'm in Boston I go to see it. And the other is that picture called 'Custer's Last Stand.'"

"Surely you don't mean that atrocious chromo showing a lot of white cavalrymen being killed and scalped—that thing which some harvesting company out West used to give away as an advertisement?"

"That's the identical one," said Meyers.

"But why, in the name of goodness, should you favor that daub?"

"I'll tell you why," said Meyers. "It's the only picture done by a white man that I ever saw where my crowd is getting as good as an even break." (Copyright by the McNaught Syndicate, Inc.)

Where Proper Relief Lay

Late in life, Messrs. Abrams and Shapinsky took up golf. Both were retired cloak and suit merchants of the type made famous in Montague Glass' immortal stories.

On a glorious September afternoon they were going over the links of their country club. They were playing for a stake of a dollar a hole, and the competition was spirited.

Mr. Abrams drove into a bunker. With his iron he made four ineffectual swipes, raising the sand in clouds. Then he stooped down, picked up the half buried ball and tossed it out on the fairway.

Mr. Shapinsky stiffened with indignation. "Look at here!" he whooped. "You couldn't do that. It's against the rules."

"I already have done it," said Mr. Abrams, calmly.

"But again I tell you it's against the rules," declared Mr. Shapinsky. "I have been playing this game longer as you have and I tell you it says in the book where you should not touch the ball with your hands at all. What am I going to do if by such tricks as that you should win the match?"

"Sue me," said Mr. Abrams. (Copyright by the McNaught Syndicate, Inc.)

On his last annual visit to his old home in Alabama, Col. Bozeman Bulger met a husky young negro, whom he remembered as a ragged pickaninny. Having spent more than a year with the A. E. F. overseas, Bulger had a natural interest in military matters. He asked the darky what service he had seen.

"I didn't git into de army at all," said the negro.

"That's surprising," said Bulger.

"You're one of the huskiest looking specimens I've seen in a long while. Even if you didn't volunteer I should have thought that the draft would have caught you."

"De draft did ketch me, but dey didn't keep me. De genelman what 'zaminmed me he let me go ag'in."

"What reason did he give?"

"Well, suh, after he done look me ovah he sort of laff an' say he reckined 'twouldn't be no satisfaction to de Germans to shoot me; an' he tole me to grab my hat an' git on out of dere."

The Blame Goes With the Name

George Barr McCutcheon, the author, walked into a Boston bookstore—Boston, the home of culture, mind you—and, idling about, found a copy of his own book Graustark. Slipping a fountain pen from his pocket he surreptitiously scribbled his name on the fly-leaf. McCutcheon writes an almost illegible hand.

He fiddled about a bit, then picked up the book and, carrying it in his hand, approached the proprietor.

"What kind of a yarn is this?" he asked.

"Pretty fair."

"How much is it?"

"Dollar and a half."

McCutcheon opened the volume at the page bearing his scrawled signature. "How about this?" he asked. "What do you want for it with this in it?"

"Oh," said the bookdealer, "that's a mutilated copy. Take it for seventy-five cents." (Copyright by the McNaught Syndicate, Inc.)

WILL VOTE ON
ADDITIONAL
LEVY IN CITYIs Not Increase in Taxes, But
Same as for the Last Five Years.

At the coming November election the voters of this city will be asked to vote on a proposition to levy an additional tax for municipal purposes at a rate not to exceed two mills on the dollar in addition to the maximum rate of taxation authorized by Section 5649-2 and 5649-3a, of the General Code of Ohio, and for a period not to exceed five years.

The resolution, No. 537, was passed by the city council, August 5, and was approved by George M. Fitzpatrick, mayor of the city.

The resolution states that the amount of taxes that may be raised by the levy of taxes at the maximum rate authorized by sections 5649-2 and 5649-3a of the general code of Ohio as it applies to the taxing district of the municipality of Circleville, will be insufficient, and that it is expedient to levy taxes at a rate in excess of such rate for municipal purposes.

The tax duplicate of the city is not large enough to take care of all the expenses. This matter has been threshed out before and we added two mills five years ago for the same purposes. The time limit will expire with this year and unless the voters of the city come to its relief and pass the two mill levy asked for, we may be in total darkness and will also place our homes in jeopardy from lack of water for five fighting purposes. Lack of water will raise insurance rates to such a point that insurance companies will consider the property we live in, as extra hazardous. We cannot afford to pass up the little raise in taxes asked for by the council. We have been paying it for the past five years and is no increase, but simply the same provision that was made five years ago for the commodities. Without five protection and light, property would depreciate in value and the safety of the city and its inhabitants would be imperiled. Citizens cannot afford to be without either convenience. Vote for the two mill levy.

ARTIST IN PIQUE
SPOILS ART WORKSplendid Memorial Model
Lost to World.

When Guizon Borglum destroyed the models for the great Stone mountain memorial, to be chiseled as a reminder of the South and her leaders, he set an example that has been followed by another artist 4,000 miles away.

The city of Milan has been holding a contest among artists for a design of a monument to be erected in honor of the city's sons who fell in the World war. Many and varied and beautiful have been the designs submitted. Yet none seems to have filled the want as expressed by the jury of award. They want something different from any memorial yet erected. They want something that shall be eternal, that shall breathe of sacrifice, liberty and glory. They want something everlasting but lyrical. E. M. L. writes in the New York Times.

The design entitled "Alla Gloria" by Giannino Castiglioni seems to have won the greatest number of admirers. It is a gorgeous thing. Upon the top of twelve great marble pillars are twelve figures representative of twelve great battles of the war. Six on a side, these pillars form a wide design in the center of which is a solitary stone. Flanked by wide marble steps are two figures which seem to indicate grief and pride of achievement. The whole is too beautiful to stand the wear and tear of the years.

And the judges want something that will last forever. They seem to want a great pyramid, not a Temple of Ephesus; they want an Alp or a Himalaya, not a Leaning Tower of Pisa or a Milan cathedral. They seem willing to abandon beauty for durability. They want something set upon a hill in Milan that will strike the visitor immediately upon his arrival, something that will be seen from afar.

"Alla Gloria" was a beautiful thing. It is so no longer. The artist was disgusted with the failure of the jury to accept his design. He did not take an ax in hand and destroy it in a fit of temper. He, it seems, talked it over with other artists whose designs had not received recognition. These artists—since misery loves company—did not continue to advocate the surpassing beauty of their own efforts. They concentrated their displeasure upon the failure of "Alla Gloria" to win recognition. So, apparently with the concurrence of the designer, they destroyed the model of a very beautiful memorial.

Wage earners are the ultimate beneficiaries of all industrial progress.

IN MEMORIAM

Editor Union Herald—In the early spring of 1844, a daughter, Samantha Caroline, was born to Thomas and Cassie Thornton, of Pleasant township, Madison county, and slept peacefully away in the early dawn of August 17, aged 81 years, three months and 28 days.

She was united in marriage to Nathaniel P. Neff, November 28, 1867, who preceded her in death, January 13, 1915.

To this union were born eight children, one dying in infancy. She leaves to mourn their loss six sons and one daughter: William, George A. and Frank, of near Pherson; Charles and Elmer, of near Darbyville; Homer, of Commercial Point, and Laura Neff Whitesides, of Derby. She also leaves twenty-one grandchildren and fifteen great-grandchildren.

Of her immediate family, she leaves one brother, Benjamin Thornton, of Darbyville, and one sister, Mrs. Mary Gillette, of Springfield, Ohio.

At the age of sixteen, she joined the church at Antioch, and later was gloriously converted in her home, after which she transferred her membership to Pherson Methodist Episcopal church.

She was a faithful wife and a kind and loving mother. She loved her family devotedly and as long as her health would permit, no task that would add happiness to her loved ones was too hard for her to perform. She lived a quiet, unassuming life and was best loved by those who knew her best.

Mrs. Neff had been in failing health for the past two years, but she bore her affliction with remarkable patience without murmur or complaint.

Card of Thanks.

We wish to express our sincere thanks to neighbors and friends, who so kindly assisted us during the sickness, and after the death of our beloved mother, also the choir and Rev. Harbale for his consoling words and to Mr. and Mrs. Snyder for their kindness.

Edison Tells How He Talked to Sweetheart

The great Edison confesses, in Hearst's International-Cosmopolitan, that he couldn't talk to his sweetheart, now Mrs. Edison, without holding her hand. He said:

"I taught the lady of my heart the Morse code, and when she could both send and receive we got along much better than we could have with spoken words, by tapping our remarks to one another on our hands. Presently I asked her thus, in Morse code, if she would marry me. The word 'Yes' is an easy one to send by telegraphic signals, and she sent it. If she had been obliged to speak it she might have found it harder."

"Nobody knew anything about many of our conversations on a long drive in the White mountains. If we had spoken words, others would have heard them. We could use pet names without the least embarrassment, although there were three other people in the carriage. We still use the telegraphic code at times. When we go to hear a spoken play she keeps her hand upon my knee and telegraphs the words the actors use so that I know something about the drama though I hear nothing of the dialogue."

Edison has been deaf since his twelfth year.

THE BARBER SHOP

IF I were asked to name the great moral and educational influences of the country I should, of course, begin with the home, the church and the public schools, but I should add to these the barber shop. What bridge whist or a tea party is to a woman, the barber shop is to a man.

It is, of course, first of all a center of recreation and rejuvenation. One man enters all raveled and ragged around the edges and makes his exit looking like a hundred thousand dollars; another comes in a rough-neck and goes out with a hair-cut and a 25-cent face massage and smelling of bay rum and sweet herbs. For 50 cents a tramp can easily be metamorphosed into a Beau Brummel. One gets more for his money in a barber shop than at any bargain counter in a department store.

If the shop is on the front street, as it usually is, one may sit or lie in the chair while the barber gives him a shampoo—"Will you have oil or eggs, sir?"—or softens up his beard preparatory to a shave and see the world pass by—youth and old, rich and poor, society favorites and street Arabs all playing their parts upon the little stage that lies in front of the barber shop window.

And within there is constant comment and criticism—frank comment and franker criticism. I always have a self-conscious feeling when I pass the window; I wonder what they are saying about me, though I am usually sure that I should not feel flattered if I knew.

There is nothing too sacred or too private to be discussed in a barber shop; there is no problem of society or athletics or politics or religion or education too difficult or too complicated for immediate and final settlement by any tonsorial tyro.

If the barber is ethically of a liberal mind, sometimes, in his shop, one can pick up the latest scandal or the last snappy story, or discover the best chance to place a bet on the coming game, or the safest back-door entrance to a thirst parlor—it all depends on the barber. If he is straight-laced he has his victim at a disadvantage when he is all lathered and swathed with towels and can drive home some pretty telling advice.

Any way of looking at him, the barber is a great institution. He is an analyzer of character, he is a character molder, he is a purveyor of useful and useless information. The man who invented the barber shop is entitled to a Carnegie medal.

If I had to make a choice between being a missionary or being a barber, I should reach for the razor.

KEEPING WELL

GOLD CURE FOR CONSUMPTION
DR. FREDERICK R. GREEN
Editor of "HEALTH"

IN A RECENT article on the newly announced gold cure for tuberculosis, I advised suspended judgment until more was known about this treatment.

Evidently we are in a fair way to more accurate knowledge in regard to its value. Dr. Peter C. Clemensen, who was sent to Copenhagen by the Chicago health department to study this new method of treatment, has just returned and made his report. Samples of the new drug, which is known as sanocrysin, have been sent to the hygienic laboratory of the United States public health service, where a committee of experts headed by Dr. Linsley R. Williams of the Tuberculosis Congress of America and Dr. George W. McCoy, chief of the hygienic laboratory, will make a careful investigation of its value.

Sanocrysin is, in chemical language, an inorganic gold salt, made up of gold, sodium and sulphur. By a salt is meant a combination of what is called a base with an acid. It is made in a chemical laboratory rather than by the action of animal or vegetable life, as are the organic serums.

This substance was first used in the treatment of tuberculosis by Dr. Holger Moellgard of Copenhagen. In many respects it resembles salvarsan, an arsenic salt first made by Ehrlich, and now widely used in the treatment of syphilis, pernicious anemia and other diseases.

Sanocrysin is used in the form of a watery solution and is injected directly into the veins. It is carried through the body by the blood. It has no injurious effect on a healthy person. When it comes in contact with the tuberculosis germs in the lungs, it destroys them, thus stopping the progress of the disease.

These are the claims of its discoverer. It is to be hoped that they are correct. Whether they are will be proven or disproven by the experiments and investigations that will be undertaken at once by the public health service and the anti-tuberculosis organizations. Until these investigations are completed no attempt will be made to treat human beings. If the claims and expectations of its discoverer are found to be correct, sanocrysin may prove to be as great an advance in the war against disease as salvarsan and insulin.

BAD EFFECT OF LABOR MONOTONY

Repression of Human Energy Most Unwise.

Monotony of work and the insidious growth of pessimistic revery under conditions of monotony are serious problems of our "machine ridden" civilization. The mental life of man is dynamic; an effort to achieve is essential. Deny this effort, or leave it unguided, and there supervenes a mental attitude described by the Freudians as "repression."

It is possible, of course, for an individual to mold himself to a routine and to compensate his falling interest in life by taking pride in his rose garden, house or family. Elton Mayo writes in Harper's Magazine. But the compensating achievement is not always so fortunate, and in any case some degree of defeat is implied—"some of him lived, but most of him died."

The human desire to achieve is essentially social; there is a fundamental urge not merely to stand well with one's fellows, but also to collaborate with them in a social task. When this initiative is denied and turned aside it only rarely finds another equally satisfactory outlet. More often than not it turns upon and manifests itself in the form of disintegrating moods of pessimism.

There are few machine shops in America or elsewhere which do not run a noisy accompaniment to a rising tide of human defeat. This is not necessary; some enlightened employers have demonstrated that it can be avoided, but widely over the industrial field the assertion remains true. The machine shop is a potent agency of repression or perversion of human energy; that civilization disregards this fact is the great stupidity of our time.

This is stupid because it is unnecessary; civilization does everything to accentuate the problem, nothing to mitigate it. Under present conditions of education and social life the average individual inevitably develops irrationalities of attitude, superstitions, fears, hatreds. These minor abnormalities of outlook matter little if by a fortunate chance life offers such an individual a happily vigorous and sufficiently varied occupation.

But should monotony chiefly characterize his daily work his fears and superstitions grow, his mental garden is uncultivated and is overrun by the poisonous weeds of unhealthy revery. It is this attitude in the mind behind the scenes of the defeated worker which gives rise to all forms of "unrest" and to the incessant shift of "travelers" from one occupation to another.

Dangerous Job

News photographers are accustomed to working in dangerous places, but G. A. Shoemaker of the army air service is said to be the only one who risks his life regularly by falling in order to take pictures, says Popular Science Monthly.

With three small motion-picture cameras strapped to his belt and a parachute on his back, this daring photographer, a senior instructor in parachute jumping, leaps from the wing of a Martin bomber.

As he falls, he looks about him calmly, taking photographs of bits of scenery or other objects of interest. If the parachute opens properly and he lands safely, he then has for sale several photographs that are of unusual value and interest.—Washington Star.

Electric Dredges

The channels of New York harbor cannot be dredged by the ordinary dredge because of the subway tunnels that run under it and at places come comparatively near the floor of the harbor. An ordinary dredge might dip too deep and break through the wall of one of these tunnels.

So the United States government, which has charge of all navigable waters, has had large electric dredges built. These dredges lower a great sieve and tube to the harbor bottom and then powerful electrically driven suction pumps draw up the silt which is clogging a channel without running the risk of damaging the transportation tunnels built below the harbor bottom.

Tree From Walking Stick

One of the largest trees in Hutchinson, Kan., has grown from a walking stick. In April, 1874, Judge W. R. Brown was walking along East Sherman street, twirling a cottonwood stick. Amos Plank was working in his yard when Judge Brown came along. "Well, I guess I'd better plant you a tree," the judge remarked, and he stuck his cane into the soft ground. Plank was called away from home for the summer. When he returned he found that the cottonwood stick had sprouted. Today it is the largest cottonwood tree in Hutchinson.

Practical Training

A specially designed seven-story brick structure has been erected in San Francisco for training firemen. It contains a room where the operation of sprinkler systems is demonstrated. Another room is, in effect, a chamber where the men brave smoke and try out various kinds of protective devices. The fire alarm system is studied in another room. The basement is used for instructing recruits how to enter burning cellars. Even the exterior walls are used for training in wall-scaling and in fire-escape work.

LEGIONAIRES CONVENE AT CHILlicothe

The Raising of Funds for Disabled Veterans Com-mended.

Chillicothe, O., Aug. 24 (UP). — Hailing the American Legion as an important link in the veterans of the nation and calling upon legionnaires for a smashing drive to complete the $5,000,000 Legion endowment fund, National Commander James A. Drain, formerly opened the annual convention of the Ohio department here today.

"The Legion is committed to serve community, state and nation in every way in which the patriots and virile young manhood which fought for America in war, can serve America in peace," Drain declared, appealing for the sacred observance of the duties of good citizenship.

When the legion has completed its endowment fund for disabled veterans and orphans of the World war, it will stand in the front rank of organizations equipped by widespread membership, unselfish purposes and financial strength to perform the maximum public service for America he said.

"It remains for less than 20 states to complete their share of the endowment fund," Drain continued. "I am assuming the fund will be fully raised and more, altho I know the raising of it depends upon strenuous, final drives in many states."

"Once the fund is raised the legion program of service to the disabled veterans and war orphans becomes assured against danger or chance."

"This service is not the whole of the Legion program. It is only the beginning. It is a putting of our house in order so that we may qualify for the many tasks of service to which we are committed and devoted."

"All over America today the Legion is helping to build community clubs and parks and roads and playgrounds is helping to beautify cities and towns is helping to encourage education and obtain better schools; to promote athletics, encourage aviation and establish landing fields, to uphold the national guard and the army and naval reserves, and to better American life in every way where sincere, loyal, vigorous and organized effort can help."

"The Legion is a strong and growing power in the whole life of the nation. It holds as its first sacred duty the care of disabled veterans and war orphans."

"In entering new fields of usefulness, it aims to fill places only where it can serve best. The Illinois, Indiana tornadoes and the Santa Barbara earthquake, all appalling catastrophes were examples where the Legion stepped in as an organized body and administered relief."

"This is one of the ways in which the Legion is ready today in all parts of America, to live up to its constitutional service for God and country."

"The establishment of the endowment fund as a backbone of our first service duty—to disabled veterans and orphans will equip us more adequately for other forms of service. We have driven and are driving hard on that immediate objective. Two-thirds of the fund is raised. I know I can count on the Legion to raise the remainder."

Harry M. Schaffer, Marietta, was elected grand chief de gare of the Ohio volution, La Societes des Hommes, et Eight Chevaux, the playground of the American Legion at the regular pre-convention session here Sunday. Schaffer succeeds Frank M. Merrick, Cleveland.

Others officers elected included: E. E. Smith, Columbus, grand chief de train; Robert Weber, Dayton, grand commissaire intendente; E. G. Gossett, Cleveland, grand correspondent; Harry Katz, Cleveland, grand conductor; K. S. Wingate, Akron, grand garde de la porte.

AMUSEMENTS

Many phases of humanity's struggles have been assembled in "Lady of the Night," the Monta Bell picture produced by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and now showing at the Met theater.

There is the eternal struggle between two women who loved the same man; the struggle of a boy to climb upward for a dubious social position, and the struggle of a young girl to extract a living from a world that has robbed her of father and mother and sent her into the streets with the doubtful credentials of a state reformatory.

It is an American story punctuated with fervid American life and love. It is a story of realism and human interest, a story of inherited blessings, and a great sacrifice. The author is Adela Rogers, St. Johns.

Monta Bell, with the cunning of a great director, has not allowed the drab scenes to go without their humor. He has dotted the story with human interest and kept it alive with action.

The plot follows the lives of two girls, born at almost the same hour. It shows the two worlds that dwell side by side, each with little knowledge, and less understanding, of the other.

The beautiful and talented Norma Shearer enacts the dual role of Florence and Molly with fine artistry. In the cast are Malcolm McGregor, George K. Arthur, Fred Esmelton, Dale Fuller, Lew Harvey and Betty Morrissey.

POLICE COURT.

Otey Zwicker was brought in Saturday on the charge of making away with a motometer owned by Mr. Rutman. Mr. Zwicker claims the motometer was given him by two boys.

Merle Wolf was placed under arrest Sunday on the charge of being drunk and disorderly.

Woman Side Issue

W. L. George, the English feminist, tried, at a Chicago banquet, to convert a conservative divine to feminism. The divine listened to Mr. George's arguments a good half hour, then shut him up rather sharply with the words: "The importance of woman! You've dinned the importance of woman into my ears from the soup all the way to the ice cream. The importance of woman! But don't you know, young man, that Scripture teaches us woman is only a side issue?"—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

Auto Pound Profitable

Poundmasters did not disappear with the banishment of the horse and wagon in favor of the automobile and truck. In San Antonio, Texas, there is an automobile poundmaster to look after forgotten and abandoned automobiles found on the city streets. In 1924 the pound made a profit of $2,002 after all expenses were paid, largely through payment made by automobile owners who had parked too long in some restricted streets.

Records Tell of Profits or Loss

Accounts Will Show Whether Farm Is Making or Losing Any Money.

The most valuable records that one can keep on the farm are those that tell the most about the farm business and help one to make changes that will prove most profitable.

It is very easy to become confused with an unrelated mass of figures and as a result the operator will get no real benefit from them. There are some farm records, however, that every farmer should keep in a clear and concise manner if he would know more about his business.

First Inventory.

The first is the inventory which is a list of everything owned and used in operating the farm. Not only the number but the values are recorded. This includes land, buildings, all live stock, equipment, feed and supplies, what you owe and what other people owe you.

The second is a record of the farm receipts. This contains an account of everything you sell from the farm, the quantity and the price you receive for it.

The third is a list of farm expenses and here you record all money paid out for the operating of the farm or the paying of farm debts.

These three records will show whether the farm is making money or losing money. They will show where you get your money and how you spend it. It will undoubtedly emphasize the importance of some of the minor enterprises of the farm, such as the sale of chickens, eggs, butter, etc.

Inventory Indispensable.

Without the inventory it is impossible to know whether the farm is getting ahead or going back. An increase or decrease in what you own will show up here.

Very little time is required to keep these records. Those who keep them declare that this work pays a better rate per hour than many other operations on the farm.

Do you have an account book this year? If not, let's hear from you—Thomas H. Summers, Extension Service, Colorado Agricultural College.

Barley Is Unsurpassed as Legume Nurse Crop

Barley is unsurpassed as a nurse crop for clovers and alfalfa; it is a better feed than oats for fattening hogs, sheep and cattle; and since it is one of the best substitutes for corn, its early-maturing quality will make this grain doubly valuable in a short-corn summer.

These are the reasons why crop specialists are advising farmers to plant barley next spring.

The early-maturing quality of barley gives it a distinct advantage over oats. This is especially true during the present corn shortage. The grain can be threshed about the same time as wheat, eliminating two threshings and making available a midsummer grain feed.

Barley is decidedly superior to late oats as a nurse crop for clovers and alfalfa because it shades the ground less, and by its early maturity leaves more moisture in the ground for the young clover.

Chiefly because of its lower percentage of hulls, barley is a better feed than oats for fattening hogs, sheep and cattle. Barley contains more carbohydrates than either wheat or oats, has less fat, and contains only one-third as much crude fiber as oats.

Clover Lowered Cost of Producing Pork in Test

A feeding trial was recently conducted by a Missouri farmer in co-operation with the Missouri experiment station. One lot of fall pigs weighing 94 pounds per head was turned into a blue grass pasture and given corn and linseed meal as a grain ration. Another similar lot was given a clover pasture and fed corn and tankage. Here is what happened: The blue grass lot gained 1.07 pounds per head per day for 42 days, while the clover lot gained 2 pounds a day for 25 days. It required 6.75 bushels corn and 7.5 pounds linseed meal to produce 100 pounds of gain in the blue grass lot and only 6 bushels corn and 2.5 pounds tankage to make the same gain by the clover lot.

The outstanding fact in this test was the superiority of clover over blue grass for rapid as well as economical gains.

Mange in Hogs Causing Immense Loss to Farmer

Mange in hogs is a parasitic skin disease that is causing considerable loss in the corn belt in general every year. In some localities there seems to be more mange this year than usual, and little, if any effective work is being undertaken to get rid of it.

Mange, of course, does not produce severe sickness or death, but it does bring about reduced gains from a given amount of feed consumed by the hogs affected by the disease. In addition to this, the packers place a considerably lower valuation on a mangy hog than on one with a healthy skin. This is not surprising to anyone who has seen carcasses of mangy hogs at slaughter houses. The roughened skin of a mangy hog gives the carcass a bad appearance, hence such carcasses have to be skinned.

Your income tax will be published again this year. Results last year seem to justify publicity.

A System of Farming That Brings Health and Prosperity

Every farm, regardless of the method of farming practiced or of the crops raised, should have at least a few good milch cows to provide

- (1) Enough milk, cream and butter for home use;
- (2) Enough skim-milk to raise some calves, pigs and chickens;
- (3) Enough cream or butter to sell to pay, in part or entirely, current living expenses.

This plan has been a "life-saver" for thousands of farmers, especially during the hard times of the past two years. It insures a living, at least, and often other income besides.

Such a plan pays best with a De Laval Cream Separator. It soon pays for itself—and skims cleaner, lasts longer and is easier to operate and clean than any other.

15,000 GALLONS
OF CHAMPAGNE

Seized—14,000 Gallons of Wine
Also Taken By Federal Officers—Officials Arrested
Aug. 8.

Sandusky, Aug. 20.—What is declared by federal prohibition agents to be the largest wine seizure ever made in Ohio was made here today by five federal agents
acting under orders of Divisional
Chief Thomas E. Stone, Clevelland, when they took possession of 15,000 gallons of choice champagne and 14,000 gallons of wine
at the plant of the M. H. Hommel Wine Co. here.

Seizure of the wine came after the agents, headed by Robert Pennell, visited the plant this morning and took possession of all the books and records of the company. Offices of the company have been placed under federal guard and admittance barred to all but government agents.

The charges against the Hommel company are the outgrowth of the purchase of the Diamond
Wine Co., a former Sandusky concern, by the Hommel company. According to Pennell, the Hommel company has been selling wines manufactured by the Diamond company under a Diamond company label when they charge the Diamond company had no permit for the sale of wines
for medicinal and sacramental purposes.

Officials of the company deny any violation of the law, declaring they had sold their own wines
under the label of the Diamond company.

Seizure of the books and other records of the company follows
the arrests on Aug. 8 of John E.
Stang, president; William H.
Hommel, treasurer, and Floyd F.
Deffenbaugh, secretary. The trio of company officers are being held on charges of unlawfully advertising intoxicating liquor for sale, transportation, possession and sale of liquor.

Stang waived examination and was bound over to the federal grand jury under bond of $5,000
when he appeared before U. S.
Commissioner Gaines at Toledo.
Deffenbaugh and Hommel are at liberty under bond pending their preliminary hearing, which has been set for Aug. 28 at Toledo.

MODERN HOUSE
IMPROVEMENT

Harry Clifton will replace the old Bauder property adjoining his residence in Pinckney street with a double frame and stucco that will be a decided improvement in that section of the city. The plans for the building were furnished by The Pickaway Lumber Co. The new building will cost approximately $14,000 and both have already been leased.

If a few more people would invest their money in modern homes for renting the house scarcity in Circleville would be relieved.

OHIO AT WORK

MARKET BASKET IN OHIO

Picturized Story of Food Price Changes in State Through
A Comparison of Size of Container Needed To Carry $5 Worth
of Retail Purchases.

Five dollars expended for food in Ohio this year will purchase the same amount of eatables as would have $3.30 expended in the same manner in 1915. Ohio housewives this year need a much smaller market basket to carry home their purchases than they used in 1915 if they are paying out the same amount of money. Or, if they are buying the same amount of food
as in the first year of the World War, they must spend $1.52 for each one dollar which went into the cash register of the neighborhood store previously.

These proportions are derived from a study of the prices of common table necessities made by the U. S. Government in principal Ohio cities. The study shows that in 1920, food prices were at their highest as were the prices of all other necessities both in Ohio and throughout the entire United States.

For each $5 expended in 1915,
approximately $7.60 must be expended now to obtain the same amount of food indicating that present prices are fifty-two percent above the 1915 level. In 1920, prices showed an advance of 117
percent compared with 1915 and it was necessary to pay out $10.85 for the same amount of food as in 1915.

Decline in the Wool Market

Stabilization is taking place in wool prices after one of the biggest declines in the history of the trade, according to the Index of the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation. The market last fall and early winter swept upward almost to the war-time peak, following the trend abroad. From the pinnacle of January, prices declined 25 to 35 per cent on different grades. The rise in wool prices late in 1924 accompanied a marked expansion in the activity of domestic mills. In the last few months a minor lull in mill activities has appeared again.
The official reports on wool consumption would indicate a need for a total of 700,000,000 pounds, or more than twice the annual domestic production. Prices are not high enough to attract large imports. Foreign markets are strengthening since the suspension of all sales in Australia, and American prices probably will not go any lower.

Circleville, Ohio, R. F. D. 1, Aug. 26, 1924.
MR. F. L. FICKARDT:
All spring I have been having trouble with my flock, both young and old. During July I lost about 100. Quite a number had LIMBER NECK or PTOMAINIE. About August 1st, I began use of your DROPS, and I can say the results fully justified your statements. One case of Limber-Neck was too sick to take the medicine. I gave it some with a dropper, thinking then it a waste of time, but the next morning it was still around and finally got well. The rest of my flock straightened out and are doing well now.

Sincerely,
MRS. LUCY HONNOLD.

to Highway Transportation

25 years of anticipating the requirements of motorists—
making manufacturing processes more certain—producing a higher standard of quality—25 years of unswerving adherence to the Firestone pledge, "Most Miles per Dollar"—summarizes Firestone's record of service to car owners.

Firestone factories have grown from a small building approximately 75 x 150 feet to mammoth plants having floor area of over 60 acres—
from a capital of $50,000 to over $50,000,000—from an annual sales volume of $100,000 to over $100,000,000—all in the short period of 25 years.

This Firestone record could only have been made through furnishing the public with outstanding values and is,
consequently, your assurance of quality and lowest prices.

If you would like to know
more of this wonderful record, ask your Firestone dealer to send you an illustrated folder.

With today's high cost of crude rubber and other raw materials, Firestone's opportunity to serve the public was never better, due to its great volume and special advantages in buying, manufacturing and distribution.

HILLSBORO CLAIMS TO BE DRY CAPITAL

WAS HOME OF CRUSADERS NOW AN IMPORTANT FACTOR

Rev. Ewing, Former Pastor, Lands Big Plum As Illinois Administrator—Roy Haynes While National Commissioner Favored Many of His Townspeople—Westerville In the Background.

Hillsboro has gained a lap on Westerville in the race for prohibition capital of United States. Hillsboro got control of the state of Illinois and southern Wisconsin, including Milwaukee, when General Lincoln C. Andrews announced Rev. R. E. Ewing former pastor of the United Brethren church of that village, would continue as administrator for the Illinois district.

Hillsboro, which boasts of 4356 inhabitants, is the county seat of Highland county. Its rival, Westerville, is in Franklin county and holds about half as many persons—280.

Westerville long had the lead thru its possession of the headquarters of the Anti-Saloon League of America. Then appeared Roy Asa Haynes in the capacity of U. S. prohibition commissioner. He was from Hillsboro, and since that time the south, so far as Ohio is concerned, has been in the saddle.

The peculiar situation in which two villages, little known to the people in general, have struggled for leadership in the moral uplift of the nation by sumptuary law, goes back many years. It was in 1873 that the women of Hillsboro decided to close up the saloons of that town. Their method was unusual. Led by Rev. William McSurely they went to each saloon in the village and prayed before it. For days they kept it up until one by one all of the liquor dealers submitted closed up their shops and quit.

It was known as the woman's crusade. It spread to other towns until all southern Ohio was affected. The movement resulted eventually in the formation of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, which grew until its branches covered the nation and eventually the world.

Later the Anti-Saloon League was created to bring business methods into dry struggle. Its headquarters were established at Westerville and that village became the gathering center of dry forces.

But down in Hillsboro, Haynes was conducting and editing a county seat paper. Early in 1920 he began a native son cry of Warren G. Harding for president. Some say he was the original Harding for president man. After the Harding administration went into office, Haynes was taken from the Ohio hills to become first commissioner under the provisions of the Volstead act. His salary of $7,500 a year was a matter of much comment in Hillsboro.

Since Haynes went into office, a comparative large number of Hillsboro persons also have gone into offices of jobs in the dry enforcement work. Ewing was among the first. He left the ministry of the church, not the largest in Hillsboro as they are mostly Methodists or Presbyterians down there, to become a field worker and lecturer for prohibition and assistant to Haynes.

Another who entered the service was William H. Walker. Mr. Walker had been county clerk of the courts. He also had been at various times tax inquisitor, state oil inspector, village marshal and village policeman. He was road contractor and bridge builder and grain and stock broker and had been engaged in several other private business enterprises, none of which was particularly successful. Walker is chief assistant to Ewing in the Illinois dry work.

H. H. Miller, owner of a Hillsboro drug store, joined the dry army. Recruited with him were Lyman Turner who had been a farmer, auto livery man and picture show owner, James E. McDermott, who was railroad agent Frank L. Lemon, who was county school teacher and holder of many minor political jobs, and Ewing Newby, county commissioner, deputy sheriff and threshing machine operator; Leslie J. Hoyt, Albert Feike and David B. Head.

This article started out to show how Hillsboro gained a lap on Westerville in getting control of prohibition enforcement in Illinois. But it was not a full lap. Ewing, altho a Hillsboro man, now was graduated from Otterbein college at Westerville.

Sewing Club Girls Met at Home of Their Leader, Mrs. Edward Wardell.

A most interesting and pleasant session of the Live Wire Sewing club of Deercreek and Wayne townships, was held at the home of their leader, Mrs. Edward H. Wardell, Wednesday afternoon, August 19, at 2:30 o'clock.

This was a social meeting and the mothers of the club members were invited to be present. No sewing was done, but a special Mothers' Day program was rendered, being prepared by Miss Carolyn Bochard, the president of the club.

Twenty-one members were present and each responded to the roll call by giving a quotation from a noted author, and which quotation was appropriate to Mothers' Day.

The program consisted of impressive readings, vocal solos, vocal duet and piano solos. A feature of the meeting was a violin solo by Elizabeth Ann Griner, of Columbus, accompanied by her sister, Virginia, on the piano.

At the conclusion of the program rendered by the girls, Mrs. Wardell gave a short talk on "Mothers' Day" and closed by giving a reading in keeping with the day and which was entitled, "A Stray Sunbeam."

During the social hour which followed, Mrs. Wardell served ice cream, angel food cake and lemonade.

The following mothers were present: Mrs. John D. Carter, Mrs. O. A. Lanman, Mrs. Floyd Warner, Mrs. Emanuel Adkins, Mrs. Ed Slager, Mrs. Bochard, Mrs. Harry West, Mrs. Thomas Wardell, Mrs. Harry J. Dunlap, Mrs. Charles Noble, Mrs. Thomas B. Betts and Mrs. Edward H. Wardell.

PICKAWAY STUDENTS.

Among those from Pickaway county who have been admitted to Ohio university at Athens so that they may begin their college work this coming September are: John Heiskell, Delos Marcy, Paul E. Darling, Byron Carmean, Circleville.

They will be members of what promises to be the largest freshman class on record at that institution, as on August 15, there had been enrolled for their initial entrance to Ohio university 350 young men and women, twenty-five per cent more than had been enrolled August 31, last year. This indicates a total of about two thousand students.

Dr. and Mrs. R. F. Lilly have returned from a week's visit to Buckeye Lake. They were accompanied from Columbus by Mr. and Mrs. Pearl Legg and Charles Stebbins and family.

Chimney Waste Checked
Most of the old-fashioned furnaces and many of the later designs lost a large percentage of their heat through the chimney. Electrical engineers are now beginning to check this waste with new devices. To date they have succeeded in converting into energy 93 per cent of the heat units of the fuel used.

Just a Little Smile

CHANCE TO MAKE GOOD
Lady (at back door)—"You an actor? You don't look it. What did you do on the stage?"
Tramp—Impersonations. I could impersonate anything. Just let me inside your pantry, and I'll give a perfect impersonation of a vacuum cleaner.
"Indeed? Well, here's my pet bloodhound. Let's see you give an impersonation of Zev."—American Legion Weekly.

Bribing the Parson
Mose was equipped with rod and basket when he bumped right into the parson, the latter headed for church.
"Where to, Mose?" asked the good man, gently.
"Well, parson, to tell you the troof, I'm on my way down to the river."
"Now, Mose, doesn't your conscience hurt you?"
"Yes, it do. If I has any luck I'll leave you a nice mess of fish."

THAT REMINDS ME

The Toastmaster—Why did you say that my story reminded you of the old wheeze you pulled? They're not at all alike.
The After-Dinner Speaker—No, but they're both printed on the same page of a joke-book published in 1850.

She Does Not
Can a woman keep a secret?
Well, it doesn't take a sage To supply a ready answer.
Does a woman tell her age?

The New Baby
Six-year-old Mabel came over to her little neighbor's the morning after the great event.
"I have a little brother now and you haven't," she boasted to Beatrice.
In haughty tones her playmate returned: "That's rothin'. The doctor came to our houth first; but my dad and I wanted a little sister."—Everybody's Magazine.

Avoiding Gossip
Walter—I don't like these girls who gossip about others.
Elsie—Neither do I. There's Betty Green, she's always telling mean things about her friends, and Eva Brown talks dreadfully about her relatives. Thank goodness, I never say anything about anybody.

Disappointment
Al—What started the riot last night?
Bert—A misprint.
Al—A misprint?
Bert—Yes, the Lyric advertised a show with 350 people and 100 costumes.—American Legion Weekly.

SAME GIRL

Son—Dad, I want to marry Dottie Dimples, the chorus girl.
Dad—I wanted to marry her myself when I was your age!

For Cross-Examination
Investigations hold their sway— Will some one send a letter To call the man who used to say We're daily growing better!

Just a Convenience, Anyhow
She—Something seems to tell me that it is my money you are after, and not me.
He—My darling, how can you say such things? Your money is merely a worldly convenience. Without you it would even be unthinkable to me.

Trying Hard
"Doris, that's the fourth time you've asked me what trumps are, my dear."
"But you want me to take an interest in the game, don't you, George?"

THEOSOPHICAL CONVENTION

There will be booths for demonstrating the work that Theosophy is doing in the interest of mankind. Mrs. Eleanor W. Bisell, formerly of Circleville, will have charge of the Publicity (propaganda) booth.
The objects of the Theosophical Society are:
To promote Universal Brotherhood without distinction of race, creed, color, sex, caste or color.
To encourage the study of comparative religion, philosophy and science.
To investigate unexplained laws of nature and the powers latent in man.

DEATH OF FORMER RESIDENT
Charles Franklin Clark, son of Robert Clark and Sarah (Crosby) Clark, was born August 6th, 1879, in Vinton County, Ohio, and died in Columbus, Ohio, August 16th, 1925, aged 46 years and 10 days. He was united in marriage with Miss Mamie Krug on July 23rd, 1908, from which union one child, Robert Calvin, was born, who, with the mother, survives to mourn their loss. He is also survived by one brother, W. A. Clark, of Circleville, Ohio, and two sisters, Mrs. Jennie Smitley, of Fort Wayne, Indiana, and Mrs. Lillie Morrison, Adelphi, Ohio.
Mr. Clark was a man among men, who was very much loved by his fellow employees. His disposition was always of the very best nature and he was a man who never complained and no job was too difficult to master. His loss to the fellow employees and employer is deeply felt and he will always be missed and never forgotten.

IS STILL RIDING THE RANGES AT 95
Mangum Is Oldest Cowboy in Active Service.
Childress, Tex.—Supple as a youth in muscle, vigorous and hearty, H. R. Mangum, ninety-five years old, is still riding the range on the big ranch of the Smith Brothers, near here. He is said to be the oldest cowboy still in active service in the country. Mangum has been a cow hand ever since he came to Texas from South Carolina, three-quarters of a century ago. He knows the history of more ranches in this state than any other person. He was well along toward middle life when the famous Chisholm trail was established. He went up the trail with herds of cattle many times. In his early life he worked on ranches in the southern part of Texas. As the wild lands of the more western parts of the state were opened up he went with the venturesome cattlemen into their new grazing territory. He was upon the frontier when Indian raids were common and when buffaloes populated the unbroken region by countless thousands.
Mangum says that he has observed no set of rules of living. He "went the usual paces" of a cowboy in the stirring early days and has devoted himself to hard work and life in the open air.

A Threat
"I done my durnedest," said the salesman of the Right Place store in Putonia, "but I couldn't make the feller buy that suit o' clothes."
"You couldn't, eh?" sneered the proprietor of the emporium. "Well, if you don't sell it to somebody within the next two weeks I'll sell it to you and take it out of your wages, and you can wear it yourself."—Kansas City Star

RADIO CHATS WITH POWEL CROSLY JR.
HOW many tubes are necessary in a radio set is a question frequently asked. To get the answer to this and other questions, the Milwaukee Journal made a survey of the so-called Greater Milwaukee Radio Market. The answers to questionnaires used showed that thirty-five per cent of all the radio sets owned in the city were three-tube sets.
THE public is gradually beginning to comprehend that the number of tubes in a set has nothing to do with the results obtained. Better results may be obtained with a one-tube set than with a five-tube, depending, of course, upon the circuit.
A comparison has been drawn between radio and motor cars. It has been said that originally automobiles were one and two cylinder cars, then followed the four, six, twin-six, and finally the eight. There are those who contend that the eight is the last word in motor construction. There are those, of course, who disagree. But the point is made that as the motor car advanced the number of cylinders increased. But that has nothing to do with radio. Some manufacturers, to be sure, kept adding tubes and tubes, and hoped that the public would believe that by increasing the number of tubes you could better the results obtained. But it is not necessarily true. There are sets today which have but three tubes and do the work of six. There are single tube sets so constructed that they do the work of three.
The small tube sets are still in the great majority, not only because they are more economical, but also because the results are satisfactory.

Automatic Lacing
The interlocking steel lacing principle already applied to galoshes and tobacco pouches, now is being used for shoes. When such shoes are first bought, the laces are tightened to fit the foot. After that it is necessary merely to slide a key up or down to "lace" or "unlace" the shoe. The automatic lacer is placed on the side of the shoe, which otherwise resembles the regular article.

Motor Trucks in China
The rapid increase in the use of motor trucks and machines in China during the last ten years, reports to the Department of Commerce show, has resulted in the steady and constantly rising growth of the gasoline trade. The total imports in 1923 amounted to 6,305,000 gallons as compared with the 1914 figures of 823,000 gallons.

Homes of Rare Birds
Birds of paradise are found in New Guinea, Molucca Islands, and a few other neighboring islands, also in north-eastern Australia. Egrets range from the United States south to southern South America, from Central Europe south to Southern Africa and from North Central Asia south to Australia.

CUT DOWN YOUR WASTE.

Light, however, has come to the makers of the grande couture. Basing their designs upon the solid foundations of the practical English costume, they have added thereto the chic that is Paris, to the end that the French rough sports costume for the wide open spaces is now sufficiently practical for the most hide-bound Briton, and it incorporates in addition an essentially Parisian smartness. The creators themselves have wisely refrained from adding seasonal improvements solely in the name of style, and what changes do occur from time to time are made, apparently at least, in the name of practicality.

Dispense With the Skirt.

Many fishing costumes entirely dispense with the skirt and consist merely of a knee-length coat and trousers, the former buttoning high at the neck. Corduroy and covert suits frequently feature sleeveless jackets, in which event a cotton crepe shirtwaist is worn underneath. The cotton crepe shirtwaist, incidentally, is an invaluable adjunct to every rough sports excursion, inasmuch as it does not wrinkle readily, and in addition requires no ironing after it is laundered.

Canoeing and camping are sports closely akin to fishing and yet there are entirely different costumes designed for the devotees of paddle and tent. Naturally if you contemplate a trip which will embrace all three of these nature recreations, it would be advisable to choose the type which will occupy most of your time—but you will never feel uncomfortable if you interchange these costumes.

The effect of the camping suit is hardy and it must obviously be carried out in every detail. High-heeled shoes, silk stockings or vivid waists would hardly harmonize with the roughing-it atmosphere of the tenning-out costume, and must, of course, be carefully avoided. Yet the tendency toward rough clothes can also be easily overdone, and is by many women who spare no efforts in an endeavor to be natural, and achieve instead an unattractive plainness. Jacket, Breeches and Skirt Suffice for Return to Nature.

The descendants of Diana and the fair followers of Sir Izaak Walton are sometimes overshadowed by the more spectacular feats of the Glennas and the Joyces, the Helens and the Suzannes, yet despite their comparative lack of publicity the cults of rod and gun are numerically greater than ever in the past. Long before then, writes a fashion correspondent in the New York Herald-Tribune, May Sutton went boldly into Wimbledon and brought a championship back with her, long before women were regarded as anything but a decorative background on links and courts, hunting and fishing, riding, canoeing, swimming and camping were regarded as the exclusive hallmarks of the sportswoman. In later years the term has taken on a new connotation to the end that what is now known as the sports dress—intended for golf, tennis and the fair looker-on—bears little relation to the exhilarative life of the wide open spaces and would never be appropriate for the whilom journeys back to nature.

Which, perhaps, is just as well. The nature-loving girl who spends patient hours fighting the speckled trout, who sturdily paddles her own canoe through the quiet lakes of the great mountains, who pitches her tent wherever nightfall finds her, has ever been truculent under the restraining dicta of the mode. For many years she rejected the frilly decrees of Paris in favor of the conservative and eminently practical costumes of London. Nor could you blame her, for in its earliest versions the Paris rough sports frock completely missed the atmosphere. The thought that even the French couture would dare dictate what she should wear when she hunted or fished or paddled was sufficient in itself to seasonally alienate her from those estimable artists.

Light, however, has come to the makers of the grande couture. Basing their designs upon the solid foundations of the practical English costume, they have added thereto the chic that is Paris, to the end that the French rough sports costume for the wide open spaces is now sufficiently practical for the most hide-bound Briton, and it incorporates in addition an essentially Parisian smartness. The creators themselves have wisely refrained from adding seasonal improvements solely in the name of style, and what changes do occur from time to time are made, apparently at least, in the name of practicality.

Dispense With the Skirt.

Many fishing costumes entirely dispense with the skirt and consist merely of a knee-length coat and trousers, the former buttoning high at the neck. adjunct to every rough sports excursion, inasmuch as it does not wrinkle readily, and in addition requires no ironing after it is laundered.

Canoeing and camping are sports closely akin to fishing and yet there are entirely different costumes designed for the devotees of paddle and tent. Naturally if you contemplate a trip which will embrace all three of these nature recreations, it would be advisable to choose the type which will occupy most of your time—but you will never feel uncomfortable if you interchange these costumes.

The effect of the camping suit is hardy and it must obviously be carried out in every detail. High-heeled shoes, silk stockings or vivid waists would hardly harmonize with the roughing-it atmosphere of the tenning-out costume, and must, of course, be carefully avoided. Yet the tendency toward rough clothes can also be easily overdone, and is by many women who spare no efforts in an endeavor to be natural, and achieve instead an unattractive plainness. The ideal outfit is neither incongruously ornate nor severely plain, but it strikes a happy compromise between the two.

English woollens are favored in the Paris-inspired camping clothes, generally in a dark-brown mixture, but the newest fabric idea on this side of the Atlantic is cotton covert cloth. This material has replaced khaki in many quarters and for obvious reasons. It is lighter in weight, far more pliable, and, greater than these, it is more adaptable to laundering. Then, too, it comes in attractive shades of green and rust as well as the characteristic brown range.

The Jacket-Knicker Suit.

The typical smart suit for camping, hiking and similar recreations consists of a jacket, knickers and a wrap-around skirt. In such a costume the jacket is a belted affair, single-breasted and with several patch pockets. The skirt, with its deep plait at the back, is slightly circular and wraps around the figure to fasten at the side front with three buttons. It is so constructed that it may be worn as a cape—a feature that will be found indispensable during the sudden rain-storm.

Canoeing costumes are divided into two categories—the outfit worn in the quiet seclusion of the mountain lake and that worn for the short paddle from the yacht club. For the first there is a smart plaid wool suit consisting of a tight-fitting jacket and knickers, both developed in a washable woolen material—beige plaided in green. The jacket, which greatly resembles a wind-breaker, has a knitted band of plain wool around the bottom and the knicker cuffs are trimmed in the same way. The high standing collar is frequently set off by a vivid four-in-hand tie that matches the kerchief headband of the wearer.

The formal canoeing suit is a much more colorful affair and is typically developed in washable flannel. Two styles lead all the rest—the jumper and the one-piece. This costume is always carefully designed to accommodate the large step which the wearer must make in stepping off the pier and into the boat—and the necessary freedom of motion is accomplished by means of skirt plaiting.

The Riding Habit.

The riding habit offers more diversification and comes nearer the heart of the mode than any other costume of the great outdoors. It has got to be smart, principally because it is frequently worn in urban places, and yet it must studiously avoid overelaboration. Long years ago the dashing figure of the early 1900's was portrayed in her most romantic moments dressed in a riding costume, and while the habit of years has changed the riding ladies have lost none of their ancient appeal.

The first choice of the modern horsewoman is whether she shall emulate the majestic Victorian or whether she shall canter forth in the masculine apparel that has acquired the stamp of modernism. The solution depends entirely upon the individual because both styles are equally in the good graces of the mode. Our personal preference is for the graceful Victorian costume, but the ultimate choice should depend upon type.

The typical riding habit, be it of the genre masculine or feminine, is characteristically cut along slightly fitted lines. The varying of sleeves is limited to the breeches suit—some of these have sleeves and others look equally attractive without. The suit may be developed entirely in a single material or it may utilize two. Among the dual combinations are flannel and linen and gabardine and pongee—gabardine and linen and flannel and pongee are equally acceptable. Melton, whipcord, English woollens and water-repellent tweeds are among other riding costume fabrics.

However, the key to the smart riding habit of 1925 will be found neither in fabric nor type, and not in the silhouette. Instead it will be noted in the opposing themes struck by costume and detail. Lay it at the door of a timorous couture, fearful of bizarre extremes, or the nicely balanced taste of the horsewoman herself, the fact remains that the mannish suit must have its feminizing accessories while the gentler habit requires the severe touch of masculine detail.

The time is passed when the measure of the value of a memorial is quantity. I hope the time has come when that measure is quality. I care not whether the material be marble or granite, its future will be measured by the character of the design. It is quality that has preserved for us the finest examples in painting and sculpture. It is quality that will stamp our imprint upon cemeteries of the future. Simplicity, correct lines and proportions and proper ornamentation are the real fundamentals. A design that is right, material that is lasting, and perfect workmanship, spells success for the future of this industry and the beautification of the cemetery. Will you let me help you select the memorial for your lot. Call at show room. NO AGENTS.

"I distrust the corporation lawyer. Earning his quarter-million a year at the corporation's hands, what laws won't he deform, if he can, in the corporation's favor?"

"In his interpretation of the law this chap is like the bon vivant whose doctor said to him:

"The old bon vivant bowed his gray head meekly. Then, when the doctor was gone, he called in his butler and said:

"Calhoun, I'm to have only one glass of port a day. Doctor's orders. See that it's served to me, Calhoun, in the celery glass."

ANY people believe the more tubes a radio has the better it is.

It is the way the tubes are used that counts.

Numerous manufacturers have to make five and six-tube sets because they do not own any patents or licenses that would permit them to get better results by using three tubes.

"Please Stand By" is a phrase not used at Station WLW in Cincinnati. A special microphone is used to tell the artist when to "prepare" and when to "broadcast," and through the use of the solo and ensemble studios, it permits a continuous program without interruption and making it unnecessary to ask the radio audience to "please stand by" while the studio is being arranged for the next number, as is the case when only one studio is available in a broadcasting station.

At this time of the year when broadcasting conditions are not as good as during the winter, it is a good plan to try all wire connections, to see that the ground wire and antennae are properly connected, that the battery connections are clean and tight, that the batteries are full strength, that the tubes are in good order—in brief, that your whole radio house is in good order.

With all connections O. K., and with batteries and tubes in good working order and assuming, of course, that the set itself is in good working condition, reception should be good. If you use wet batteries, keep them well charged. If you use dry batteries, test them frequently and don't delay in replacing a run-down battery.

Radio is now an all-year-round means of getting entertainment and education. In the summer time, when the outdoor calls, the radio can be taken out of doors too.

For Somber Music

The saxophone was designed at the start to play religious music. Its somber tones were for serious things. In fact, Mendelssohn found it so mournful that he wouldn't allow it to be played in any of the orchestras he conducted.—Exchange.

Wales Credited With
Some Snappy Comeback

The prince of Wales is the hero of an anecdote that does credit to his wit. The prince was held up one September evening by a reporter in a New York night club.

"Sir," said the reporter hurriedly, "will you please tell me why, at your age, you are not yet married? Is it true that you were once engaged to the king of Italy's daughter and that the engagement was broken off? If so, what was the cause of the rupture? Would you be willing to marry an American girl? Would your parents be willing? What dowry?" "Hold on," the prince interrupted. "You must first tell me your name, age and salary. Are you single, married or divorced? If divorced, what alimony do you pay? Do you really pay it? Ever been fired? If so, why? How did it feel the last time? State—" But here, with an impatient laugh, the reporter turned and hurried from the night club.

Finds Guests Honest

At Pearsall, Texas, the sheriff of the county, H. L. Brooks, has put into operation a "help yourself" hotel and the guests appear to like it. The guests register without assistance, earning from a nearby blackboard the number of the room they select. When they leave after a day or a month, they put the money to pay for their stay in an envelope and drop it into a locked box near the door. The hotel owner seldom appears, there is no cashier and servants give unobtrusive service. Mr. Brooks says he has been cheated out of only $2 thus far.

Lo the Wise Indian!

Big Chief Meyers, who caught for the New York Giants in the days when the battery of Mathewson and Meyers was famous, was—and still is—a remarkable man. Although a full-blooded Indian of one of the California mission tribes he is a college graduate and, what is rather unusual in a professional ball-player, an exceedingly well-informed lover of art, and he has a keen wit. His tribal name was, Tortes. One day a curious person asked him why he had taken the name of John Meyers.

"It sounds so Indian," said Meyers. On another occasion a friend invited Meyers to tell him what his favorite pictures were.

"There are two that I particularly like," said the brawny Indian. "One is Abbey's mural painting, 'The Quest of the Holy Grail,' on the walls of the Boston public library. Whenever I'm in Boston I go to see it. And the other is that picture called 'Custer's Last Stand.'"

"Surely you don't mean that atrocious chromo showing a lot of white cavalrymen being killed and scalped—that thing which some harvesting company out West used to give away as an advertisement?"

"That's the identical one," said Meyers.

"But why, in the name of goodness, should you favor that daub?"

"I'll tell you why," said Meyers. "It's the only picture done by a white man that I ever saw where my crowd is getting as good as an even break." (Copyright by the McNaught Syndicate, Inc.)

Where Proper Relief Lay

Late in life, Messrs. Abrams and Shapinsky took up golf. Both were retired cloak and suit merchants of the type made famous in Montague Glass' immortal stories.

On a glorious September afternoon they were going over the links of their country club. They were playing for a stake of a dollar a hole, and the competition was spirited.

Mr. Abrams drove into a bunker. With his iron he made four ineffectual swipes, raising the sand in clouds. Then he stooped down, picked up the half buried ball and tossed it out on the fairway.

Mr. Shapinsky stiffened with indignation.

"Look a' here!" he whooped. "You couldn't do that. It's against the rules."

"I already have done it," said Mr. Abrams, calmly.

"But again I tell you it's against the rules," declared Mr. Shapinsky. "I have been playing this game longer as you have and I tell you it says in the book where you should not touch the ball with your hands at all. What am I going to do if by such tricks as that you should win the match?"

"Sue me," said Mr. Abrams.

Mostly on the Ground Floor

On his last annual visit to his old home in Alabama, Col. Bozeman Bulger met a husky young negro, whom he remembered as a ragged pickaninny. Having spent more than a year with the A. E. F. overseas, Bulger had a natural interest in military matters. He asked the darky what service he had seen.

"I didn't git into de army at all," said the negro.

"That's surprising," said Bulger. "You're one of the huskiest looking specimens I've seen in a long while. Even if you didn't volunteer I should have thought that the draft would have caught you."

"De draft did ketch me, but dey didn't keep me. De gencelman what zaminde me he let me go ag'in."

"What reason did he give?" "Well, suh, after he done look me ovah he sort of laff an' say he reckined 'twouldn't be no satisfaction to de Germans to shoot me; an' he tole me to grab my hat an' git on out of dere."

"What were his exact words?" "Well, suh, near ez I kin rekollect he say dat my feet was so big an' so flat dat even if I did git shot I wouldn't fall ovah."

The Blame Goes With the Name

George Barr McCutcheon, the author, walked into a Boston bookstore—Boston, the home of culture, mind you—and, idling about, found a copy of his own book Graustark. Slipping a fountain pen from his pocket he surreptitiously scribbled his name on the fly-leaf. McCutcheon writes an almost illegible hand.

He fiddled about a bit, then picked up the book and, carrying it in his hand, approached the proprietor.

"What kind of a yarn is this?" he asked.

"Pretty fair."

"How much is it?"

"Dollar and a half."

"How about this?" he asked. "What do you want for it with this in it?"

"Oh," said the bookdealer, "that's a mutilated copy. Take it for seventy-five cents."

WILL VOTE ON
ADDITIONAL
LEVY IN CITYIs Not Increase in Taxes, But
Same as for the Last Five Years.

At the coming November election the voters of this city will be asked to vote on a proposition to levy an additional tax for municipal purposes at a rate not to exceed two mills on the dollar in addition to the maximum rate of taxation authorized by Section 5649-2 and 5649-3a, of the General Code of Ohio, and for a period not to exceed five years.

The resolution, No. 537, was passed by the city council, August 5, and was approved by George M. Fitzpatrick, mayor of the city.

The resolution states that the amount of taxes that may be raised by the levy of taxes at the maximum rate authorized by sections 5649-2 and 5649-3a of the general code of Ohio as it applies to the taxing district of the municipality of Circleville, will be insufficient, and that it is expedient to levy taxes at a rate in excess of such rate for municipal purposes.

The tax duplicate of the city is not large enough to take care of all the expenses. This matter has been threshed out before and we added two mills five years ago for the same purposes. The time limit will expire with this year and unless the voters of the city come to its relief and pass the two mill levy asked for, we may be in total darkness and will also place our homes in jeopardy for lack of water for five fighting purposes. Lack of water will raise insurance rates to such a point that insurance companies will consider the property we live in, as extra hazardous. We cannot afford to pass up the little raise in taxes asked for by the council. We have been paying it for the past five years and is no increase, but simply the same provision that was made five years ago for the commodities. Without five protection and light, property would depreciate in value and the safety of the city and its inhabitants would be imperiled. Citizens cannot afford to be without either convenience. Vote for the two mill levy.

ARTIST IN PIQUE
SPOILS ART WORKSplendid Memorial Model
Lost to World.

When Gutzon Borglum destroyed the models for the great Stone mountain memorial, to be chiseled as a reminder of the South and her leaders, he set an example that has been followed by another artist 4,000 miles away.

The city of Milan has been holding a contest among artists for a design of a monument to be erected in honor of the city's sons who fell in the World war. Many and varied and beautiful have been the designs submitted. Yet none seems to have filled the want as expressed by the jury of award. They want something different from any memorial yet erected. They want something that shall be eternal, that shall breathe of sacrifice, liberty and glory. They want something everlasting but lyrical. E. M. L. writes in the New York Times.

The design entitled "Alia Gloria" by Giannino Castiglioni seems to have won the greatest number of admirers. It is a gorgeous thing. Upon the top of twelve great marble pillars are twelve figures representative of twelve great battles of the war. Six on a side, these pillars form a wide design in the center of which is a solitary stone. Flanked by wide marble steps are two figures which seem to indicate grief and pride of achievement. The whole is too beautiful to stand the wear and tear of the years.

And the judges want something that will last forever. They seem to want a great pyramid, not a Temple of Ephesus; they want an Alp or a Himalaya, not a Leaning Tower of Pisa or a Milan cathedral. They seem willing to abandon beauty for durability. They want something set upon a hill in Milan that will strike the visitor immediately upon his arrival, something that will be seen from afar.

"Alia Gloria" was a beautiful thing. It is so no longer. The artist was disgusted with the failure of the jury to accept his design. He did not take an ax in hand and destroy it in a fit of temper. He, it seems, talked it over with other artists whose designs had not received recognition. These artists—since misery loves company—did not continue to advocate the surpassing beauty of their own efforts. They concentrated their displeasure upon the failure of "Alia Gloria" to win recognition. So, apparently with the concurrence of the designer, they destroyed the model of a very beautiful memorial.

Wage earners are the ultimate beneficiaries of all industrial progress.

IN MEMORIAM

Editor Union Herald—In the early spring of 1844, a daughter, Samantha Caroline, was born to Thomas and Cassie Thornton, of Pleasant township, Madison county, and slept peacefully away in the early dawn of August 17, aged 81 years, three months and 28 days.

She was united in marriage to Nathaniel P. Neff, November 28, 1867, who preceded her in death, January 13 1915.

To this union were born eight children, one dying in infancy. She leaves to mourn their loss six sons and one daughter: William, George A. and Frank, of near Pherson; Charles and Elmer, of near Darbyville; Homer, of Commercial Point, and Laura Neff Whitesides, of Derby. She also leaves twenty-one grandchildren and fifteen great-grandchildren.

Of her immediate family, she leaves one brother, Benjamin Thornton, of Darbyville, and one sister, Mrs. Mary Gillette, of Springfield, Ohio.

At the age of sixteen, she joined the church at Antioch, and later was gloriously converted in her home, after which she transferred her membership to Pherson Methodist Episcopal church.

She was a faithful wife and a kind and loving mother. She loved her family devotedly and as long as her health would permit, no task that would add happiness to her loved ones was too hard for her to perform. She lived a quiet, unassuming life and was best loved by those who knew her best.

Mrs. Neff had been in failing health for the past two years, but she bore her affliction with remarkable patience without murmur or complaint.

We wish to express our sincere thanks to neighbors and friends, who so kindly assisted us during the sickness and after the death of our beloved mother, also the choir and Rev. Harble for his consoling words and to Mr. and Mrs. Snyder for their kindness.

Edison Tells How He Talked to Sweetheart

The great Edison confesses, in Hearst's International-Cosmopolitan, that he couldn't talk to his sweetheart, now Mrs. Edison, without holding her hand. He said:

"I taught the lady of my heart the Morse code, and when she could both send and receive we got along much better than we could have with spoken words, by tapping our remarks to one another on our hands. Presently I asked her thus, in Morse code, if she would marry me. The word 'Yes' is an easy one to send by telegraphic signals, and she sent it. If she had been obliged to speak it she might have found it harder.

"Nobody knew anything about many of our conversations on a long drive in the White mountains. If we had spoken words, others would have heard them. We could use pet names without the least embarrassment, although there were three other people in the carriage. We still use the telegraphic code at times. When we go to hear a spoken play she keeps her hand upon my knee and telegraphs the words the actors use so that I know something about the drama though I hear nothing of the dialogue."

Edison has been deaf since his twelfth year.

THE BARBER SHOP

IF I were asked to name the great moral and educational influences of the country I should, of course, begin with the home, the church and the public schools, but I should add to these the barber shop. What bridge whist or a tea party is to a woman, the barber shop is to a man.

It is, of course, first of all a center of recreation and rejuvenation. One man enters all raveled and ragged around the edges and makes his exit looking like a hundred thousand dollars; another comes in a rough-neck and goes out with a hair-cut and a 25-cent face massage and smelling of bay rum and sweet herbs. For 50 cents a tramp can easily be metamorphosed into a Beau Brummel. One gets more for his money in a barber shop than at any bargain counter in a department store.

If the shop is on the front street, as it usually is, one may sit or lie in the chair while the barber gives him a shampoo—"Will you have oil or eggs, sir?"—or softens up his beard preparatory to a shave and see the world pass by—young and old, rich and poor, society favorites and street Arabs all playing their parts upon the little stage that lies in front of the barber shop window.

And within there is constant comment and criticism—frank comment and franker criticism. I always have a self-conscious feeling when I pass the window; I wonder what they are saying about me, though I am usually sure that I should not feel flattered if I knew.

There is nothing too sacred or too private to be discussed in a barber shop; there is no problem of society or athletics or politics or religion or education too difficult or too complicated for immediate and final settlement by any tongsorial tyro.

If the barber is ethically of a liberal mind, sometimes, in his shop, one can pick up the latest scandal or the last snappy story, or discover the best chance to place a bet on the coming game, or the safest back-door entrance to a thirst parlor—it all depends on the barber. If he is straight-laced he has his victim at a disadvantage when he is all lathered and swathed with towels and can drive home some pretty telling advice.

Any way of looking at him, the barber is a great institution. He is an analyzer of character, he is a character molder, he is a purveyor of useful and useless information. The man who invented the barber shop is entitled to a Carnegie medal.

If I had to make a choice between being a missionary or being a barber, I should reach for the razor.

KEEPING WELL GOLD CURE FOR CONSUMPTION

DR. FREDERICK R. GREEN
Editor of "HEALTH"

IN A RECENT article on the newly announced gold cure for tuberculosis, I advised suspended judgment until more was known about this treatment.

Evidently we are in a fair way to more accurate knowledge in regard to its value. Dr. Peter C. Clemensen, who was sent to Copenhagen by the Chicago health department to study this new method of treatment, has just returned and made his report. Samples of the new drug, which is known as sanocrysin, have been sent to the hygienic laboratory of the United States public health service, where a committee of experts headed by Dr. Linsly R. Williams of the Tuberculosis Congress of America and Dr. George W. McCoy, chief of the hygienic laboratory, will make a careful investigation of its value.

Sanocrysin is, in chemical language, an inorganic gold salt, made up of gold, sodium and sulphur. By a salt is meant a combination of what is called a base with an acid. It is made in a chemical laboratory rather than by the action of animal or vegetable life, as are the organic serums.

This substance was first used in the treatment of tuberculosis by Dr. Holger Moellgard of Copenhagen. In many respects it resembles salvarsan, an arsenic salt first made by Ehrlich, and now widely used in the treatment of syphilis, pernicious anemia and other diseases.

Sanocrysin is used in the form of a watery solution and is injected directly into the veins. It is carried through the body by the blood. It has no injurious effect on a healthy person. When it comes in contact with the tuberculosis germs in the lungs, it destroys them, thus stopping the progress of the disease.

These are the claims of its discoverer. It is to be hoped that they are correct. Whether they are will be proven or disproven by the experiments and investigations that will be undertaken at once by the public health service and the anti-tuberculosis organizations. Until these investigations are completed no attempt will be made to treat human beings. If the claims and expectations of its discoverer are found to be correct, sanocrysin may prove to be as great an advance in the war against "dis-ease as salvarsan and insulin."

BAD EFFECT OF LABOR MONOTONY

Repression of Human Energy Most Unwise.

Monotony of work and the insidious growth of pessimistic revery under conditions of monotony are serious problems of our "machine ridden" civilization. The mental life of man is dynamic; an effort to achieve is essential. Deny this effort, or leave it unguided, and there supervenes a mental attitude described by the Freudians as "repression."

It is possible, of course, for an individual to mold himself to a routine and to compensate his falling interest in life by taking pride in his rose garden, house or family, Elton Mayo writes in Harper's Magazine. But the compensating achievement is not always so fortunate, and in any case some degree of defeat is implied—"some of him lived, but most of him died."

The human desire to achieve is essentially social; there is a fundamental urge not merely to stand well with one's fellows, but also to collaborate with them in a social task. When this initiative is denied and turned aside it only rarely finds another equally satisfactory outlet. More often than not it turns upon and manifests itself in the form of disintegrating moods of pessimism.

There are few machine shops in America or elsewhere which do not run a noisy accompaniment to a rising tide of human defeat. This is not necessary; some enlightened employers have demonstrated that it can be avoided, but widely over the industrial field the assertion remains true. The machine shop is a potent agency of repression or perversion of human energy; that civilization disregards this fact is the great stupidity of our time.

This is stupid because it is unnecessary; civilization does everything to accentuate the problem, nothing to mitigate it. Under present conditions of education and social life the average individual inevitably develops irrationalities of attitude, superstitions, fears, hatreds. These minor abnormalities of outlook matter little if by a fortunate chance life offers such an individual a happily vigorous and sufficiently varied occupation.

But should monotony chiefly characterize his daily work his fears and superstitions grow, his mental garden is uncultivated and is overrun by the poisonous weeds of unhealthy revery. It is this attitude in the mind behind the scenes of the defeated worker which gives rise to all forms of "unrest" and to the incessant shift of "travelers" from one occupation to another.

Dangerous Job

News photographers are accustomed to working in dangerous places, but G. A. Shoemaker of the army air service is said to be the only one who risks his life regularly by falling in order to take pictures, says Popular Science Monthly.

With three small motion-picture cameras strapped to his belt and a parachute on his back, this daring photographer, a senior instructor in parachute jumping, leaps from the wing of a Martin bomber.

As he falls, he looks about him calmly, taking photographs of bits of scenery or other objects of interest. If the parachute opens properly and he lands safely, he then has for sale several photographs that are of unusual value and interest.—Washington Star.

Electric Dredges

The channels of New York harbor cannot be dredged by the ordinary dredge because of the subway tunnels that run under it and at places come comparatively near the floor of the harbor. An ordinary dredge might dip too deep and break through the wall of one of these tunnels.

So the United States government, which has charge of all navigable waters, has had large electric dredges built. These dredges lower a great sieve and tube to the harbor bottom and then powerful electrically driven suction pumps draw up the silt which is clogging a channel without running the risk of damaging the transportation tunnels built below the harbor bottom.

Tree From Walking Stick

One of the largest trees in Hutchinson, Kan., has grown from a walking stick. In April, 1874, Judge W. R. Brown was walking along East Sherman street, twirling a cottonwood stick. Amos Plank was working in his yard when Judge Brown came along. "Well, I guess I'd better plant you a tree," the Judge remarked, and he stuck his cane into the soft ground. Plank was called away from home for the summer. When he returned he found that the cottonwood stick had sprouted. Today it is the largest cottonwood tree in Hutchinson.

Practical Training

A specially designed seven-story brick structure has been erected in San Francisco for training firemen. It contains a room where the operation of sprinkler systems is demonstrated. Another room is, in effect, a chamber where the men brave smoke and try out various kinds of protective devices. The fire alarm system is studied in another room. The basement is used for instructing recruits how to enter burning cellars. Even the exterior walls are used for training in wall-scaling and in fire-escape work.

LEGIONAIRES CONVENE AT CHILLICOTHE

The Raising of Funds for Disabled Veterans Com-mended.

Chillicothe, O., Aug. 24 (UP).—Hailing the American Legion as an important link in the veterans of the nation and calling upon legionnaires for a smashing drive to complete the $50,000,000 Legion endowment fund, National Commander James A. Drain, formerly opened the annual convention of the Ohio department here today.

"The Legion is committed to serve community, state and nation in every way in which the patriots and virile young manhood which fought for America in war, can serve America in peace," Drain declared, appealing for the sacred observance of the duties of good citizenship.

When the legion has completed its endowment fund for disabled veterans and orphans of the World war, it will stand in the front rank of organizations equipped by widespread membership, unselfish purposes and financial strength to perform the maximum public service for America he said.

"It remains for less than 20 states to complete their share of the endowment fund," Drain continued. "I am assuming the fund will be fully raised and more, altho I know the raising of it depends upon strenuous, final drives in many states.

"Once the fund is raised the legion program of service to the disabled veterans and war orphans becomes assured against danger or chance.

"This service is not the whole of the Legion program. It is only the beginning. It is a putting of our house in order so that we may qualify for the many tasks of service to which we are committed and devoted.

"All over America today the Legion is helping to build community clubs and parks and roads and playgrounds is helping to beautify cities and towns is helping to encourage education and obtain better schools; to promote athletics, encourage aviation and establish landing fields, to uphold the national guard and the army and naval reserves, and to better American life in every way where sincere, loyal, vigorous and organized effort can help.

"The Legion is a strong and growing power in the whole life of the nation. It holds as its first sacred duty the care of disabled veterans and war orphans.

"In entering new fields of usefulness, it aims to fill places only where it can serve best. The Illinois, Indiana tornadoes and the Santa Barbara earthquake, all appalling catastrophes were examples where the Legion stepped in as an organized body and administered relief.

"This is one of the ways in which the Legion is ready today in all parts of America, to live up to its constitutional service for God and country.

"The establishment of the endowment fund as a backbone of our first service duty—to disabled veterans and orphans will equip us more adequately for other forms of service. We have driven and are driving hard on that immediate objective. Two-thirds of the fund is raised. I know I can count on the Legion to raise the remainder."

Harry M. Schaffer, Marietta, was elected grand chef de gare of the Ohio vouture, La Societes des Hommes, et Eight Chevaux, the playground of the American Legion at the regular pre-convention session here Sunday. Schaffer succeeds Frank M. Merrick, Cleveland.

Others officers elected included: E. E. Smith, Columbus, grand chef de train; Robert Weber, Dayton, grand commissaire intendente; E. G. Gossett, Cleveland, grand correspondent; Harry Katz, Cleveland, grand conductor; K. S. Wingate, Akron, grand garde de la porte.

AMUSEMENTS

AMUSEMENTS

Many phases of humanity's struggles have been assembled in "Lady of the Night," the Monta Bell picture produced by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and now showing at the Met theater.

There is the eternal struggle between two women who loved the same man; the struggle of a boy to climb upward for a dubious social position, and the struggle of a young girl to extract a living from a world that has robbed her of father and mother and sent her into the streets with the doubtful credentials of a state reformatory.

It is an American story punctuated with fervid American life and love. It is a story of realism and human interest, a story of inherited blessings and a great sacrifice. The author is Adela Rogers, St. Johns.

Monta Bell, with the cunning of a great director, has not allowed the drab scenes to go without their humor. He has dotted the story with human interest and kept it alive with action.

The plot follows the lives of two girls, born at almost the same hour. It shows the two worlds that dwell side by side, each with little knowledge, and less understanding, of the other.

The beautiful and talented Norma Shearer enacts the dual role of Florence and Molly with fine artistry. In the cast are Malcolm McGregor, George K. Arthur, Fred Esmelton, Dale Fuller, Lew Harvey and Betty Morrissey.

POLICE COURT.

Otey Zwicker was brought in Saturday on the charge of making away with a motometer owned by a Mr. Rutman. Mr. Zwicker claims the motometer was given him by two boys.

Merle Wolf was placed under arrest Sunday on the charge of being drunk and disorderly.

Woman Side Issue

W. L. George, the English feminist, tried, at a Chicago banquet, to convert a conservative divine to feminism.

The divine listened to Mr. George's arguments a good half hour, then shut him up rather sharply with the words: "The importance of woman! You've dined the importance of woman into my ears from the soup all the way to the ice cream. The importance of woman! But don't you know, young man, that Scripture teaches us woman is only a side issue?"—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

Auto Pound Profitable

Poundmasters did not disappear with the banishment of the horse and wagon in favor of the automobile and truck. In San Antonio, Texas, there is an automobile poundmaster to look after forgotten and abandoned automobiles found on the city streets. In 1924 the pound made a profit of $2,062 after all expenses were paid, largely through payment made by automobile owners who had parked too long in some restricted streets.

Records Tell of Profits or Loss

Accounts Will Show Whether Farm Is Making or Losing Any Money.

The most valuable records that one can keep on the farm are those that tell the most about the farm business and help one to make changes that will prove most profitable.

It is very easy to become confused with an unrelated mass of figures and as a result the operator will get no real benefit from them. There are some farm records, however, that every farmer should keep in a clear and concise manner if he would know more about his business.

First Inventory.

The first is the inventory which is a list of everything owned and used in operating the farm. Not only the number but the values are recorded. This includes land, buildings, all live stock, equipment, feed and supplies, what you owe and what other people owe you.

The second is a record of the farm receipts. This contains an account of everything you sell from the farm, the quantity and the price you receive for it.

The third is a list of farm expenses and here you record all money paid out for the operating of the farm or the paying of farm debts.

These three records will show whether the farm is making money or losing money. They will show where you get your money and how you spend it. It will undoubtedly emphasize the importance of some of the minor enterprises of the farm, such as the sale of chickens, eggs, butter, etc.

Inventory Indispensable.

Without the inventory it is impossible to know whether the farm is getting ahead or going back. An increase or decrease in what you own will show up here.

Very little time is required to keep these records. Those who keep them declare that this work pays a better rate per hour than many other operations on the farm.

Do you have an account book this year? If not, let's hear from you—Thomas H. Summers, Extension Service, Colorado Agricultural College.

Barley Is Unsurpassed as Legume Nurse Crop

Barley is unsurpassed as a nurse crop for clovers and alfalfa; it is a better feed than oats for fattening hogs, sheep and cattle; and since it is one of the best substitutes for corn, its early-maturing quality will make this grain doubly valuable in a short-corn summer.

These are the reasons why crop specialists are advising farmers to plant barley next spring.

The early-maturing quality of barley gives it a distinct advantage over oats. This is especially true during the present corn shortage. The grain can be threshed about the same time as wheat, eliminating two threshings and making available a midsummer grain feed.

Barley is decidedly superior to late oats as a nurse crop for clovers and alfalfa because it shades the ground less, and by its early maturity leaves more moisture in the ground for the young clover.

Chiefly because of its lower percentage of hulls, barley is a better feed than oats for fattening hogs, sheep and cattle. Barley contains more carbohydrates than either wheat or oats, has less fat, and contains only one-third as much crude fiber as oats.

Clover Lowered Cost of Producing Pork in Test

A feeding trial was recently conducted by a Missouri farmer in co-operation with the Missouri experiment station. One lot of fall pigs weighing 94 pounds per head was turned into a blue grass pasture and given corn and linseed meal as a grain ration. Another similar lot was given a clover pasture and fed corn and tankage. Here is what happened: The blue grass lot gained 1.07 pounds per head per day for 42 days, while the clover lot gained 2 pounds a day for 25 days. It required 6.75 bushels corn and 7.5 pounds linseed meal to produce 100 pounds of gain in the blue grass lot and only 6 bushels corn and 2.5 pounds tankage to make the same gain by the clover lot.

The outstanding fact in this test was the superiority of clover over blue grass for rapid as well as economical gains.

Mange in Hogs Causing Immense Loss to Farmer

Mange in hogs is a parasitic skin disease that is causing considerable loss in the corn belt in general every year. In some localities there seems to be more mange this year than usual, and little, if any effective work is being undertaken to get rid of it.

Mange, of course, does not produce severe sickness or death, but it does bring about reduced gains from a given amount of feed consumed by the hogs affected by the disease. In addition to this, the packers place a considerably lower valuation on a mangy hog than on one with a healthy skin. This is not surprising to anyone who has seen carcasses of mangy hogs at slaughter houses. The roughened skin of a mangy hog gives the carcass a sad appearance, hence such carcasses have to be skinned.

A System of Farming That Brings Health and Prosperity

Every farm, regardless of the method of farming practiced or of the crops raised, should have at least a few good milch cows to provide

- (1) Enough milk, cream and butter for home use;
- (2) Enough skim-milk to raise some calves, pigs and chickens;
- (3) Enough cream or butter to sell to pay, in part or entirely, current living expenses.

This plan has been a "life-saver" for thousands of farmers, especially during the hard times of the past two years. It insures a living, at least, and often other income besides.

Such a plan pays best with a De Laval Cream Separator. It soon pays for itself—and skims cleaner, lasts longer and is easier to operate and clean than any other.

15,000 GALLONS OF CHAMPAGNE

Seized—14,000 Gallons of Wine
Also Taken By Federal Officers—Officials Arrested
Aug. 8.

Sandusky, Aug. 20.—What is declared by federal prohibition agents to be the largest wine seizure ever made in Ohio was made here today by five federal agents acting under orders of Divisional Chief Thomas E. Stone, Cleveland, when they took possession of 15,000 gallons of choice champagne and 14,000 gallons of wine at the plant of the M. H. Hommel Wine Co. here.

Seizure of the wine came after the agents, headed by Robert Pennell, visited the plant this morning and took possession of all the books and records of the company. Offices of the company have been placed under federal guard and admittance barred to all but government agents.

The charges against the Hommel company are the outgrowth of the purchase of the Diamond Wine Co., a former Sandusky concern, by the Hommel company. According to Pennell, the Hommel company has been selling wines manufactured by the Diamond company under a Diamond company label when they charge the Diamond company had no permit for the sale of wines for medicinal and sacramental purposes.

Officials of the company deny any violation of the law, declaring they had sold their own wines under the label of the Diamond company.

Seizure of the books and other records of the company follows the arrests on Aug. 8 of John E. Stang, president; William H. Hommel, treasurer, and Floyd F. Deffenbaugh, secretary. The trio of company officers are being held on charges of unlawfully advertising intoxicating liquor for sale, transportation, possession and sale of liquor.

Stang waived examination and was bound over to the federal grand jury under bond of $5,000 when he appeared before U. S. Commissioner Gaines at Toledo. Deffenbaugh and Hommel are at liberty under bond pending their preliminary hearing, which has been set for Aug. 28 at Toledo.

ANOTHER MODERN HOUSE IMPROVEMENT

Harry Clifton will replace the old Bauder property adjoining his residence in Pinckney street with a double frame and stucco that will be a decided improvement in that section of the city. The plans for the building were furnished by The Pickaway Lumber Co. The new building will cost approximately $14,000 and both have already been leased.

If a few more people would invest their money in modern homes for renting the house scarcity in Circleville would be relieved.

OHIO AT WORK

MARKET BASKET IN OHIO

Picturized Story of Food Price Changes in State Through
A Comparison of Size of Container Needed To Carry $5 Worth
of Retail Purchases.

COPYRIGHT 1925, BY CENTRAL NATIONAL BANK, CLEVELAND.

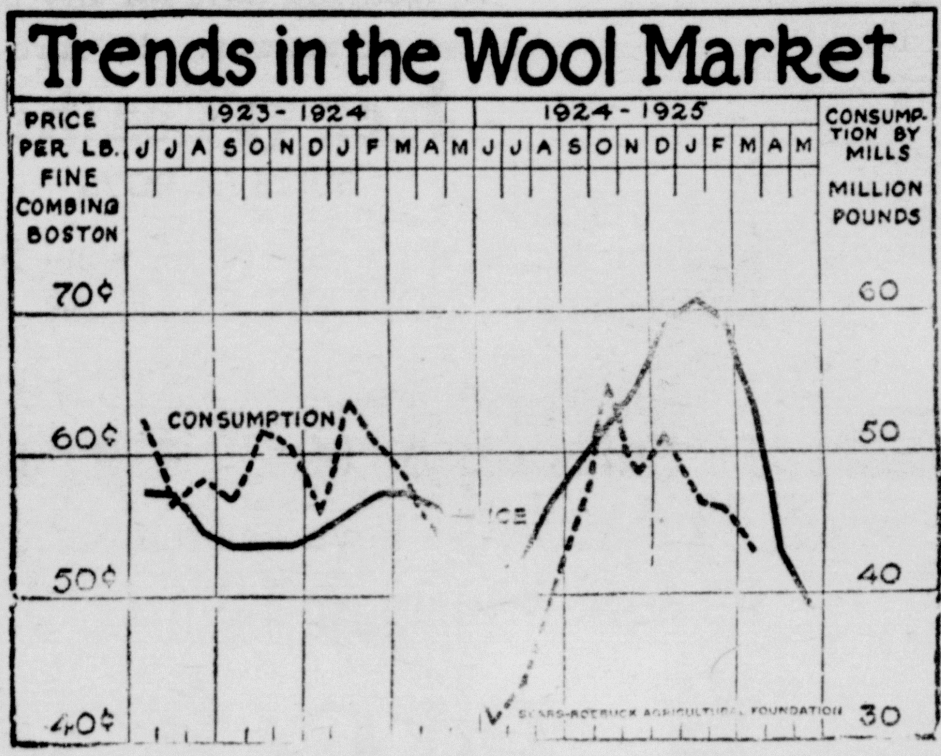

Five dollars expended for food in Ohio this year will purchase the same amount of eatables as would have $3.30 expended in the same manner in 1915. Ohio housewives this year need a much smaller market basket to carry home their purchases than they used in 1915 if they are paying out the same amount of money. Or, if they are buying the same amount of food as in the first year of the World War, they must spend $1.52 for each one dollar which went into the cash register of the neighborhood store previously.

These proportions are derived from a study of the prices of common table necessities made by the U. S. Government in principal Ohio cities. The study shows that in 1920, food prices were at their highest as were the prices of all other necessities both in Ohio and throughout the entire United States.

For each $5 expended in 1915, approximately $7.60 must be expended now to obtain the same amount of food indicating that present prices are fifty-two percent above the 1915 level. In 1920, prices showed an advance of 117 percent compared with 1915 and it was necessary to pay out $10.85 for the same amount of food as in 1915.

Decline in the Wool Market

Stabilization is taking place in wool prices after one of the biggest declines in the history of the trade, according to the Index of the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation. The market last fall and early winter swept upward almost to the war-time peak, following the trend abroad. From the pinnacle of January, prices declined 25 to 35 per cent on different grades. The rise in wool prices late in 1924 accompanied a marked expansion in the activity of domestic mills. In the last few months a minor lull in mill activities has appeared again. The official reports on wool consumption would indicate a need for a total of 700,000,000 pounds, or more than twice the annual domestic production. Prices are not high enough to attract large imports. Foreign markets are strengthening since the suspension of all sales in Australia, and American prices probably will not go any lower.

BELGIAN DEBT

Settlement is Approved By the President.

Northampton, Mass., Aug. 21. —(UP.)—The terms of the Belgian debt settlement have met the full approval of President Coolidge.

The papers, presented the president by his personal stenographer, who met him on his arrival here from Plymouth, Vt., were signed at once, and were taken back to Swampscott where they will be sent to Washington.

The President's signing of the agreement leaves the next step in the debt funding arrangements, so far as the United States is concerned, up to congress which will be asked to ratify the settlement when it convenes in December.

25 Years of Firestone Service to Highway Transportation

25 years of anticipating the requirements of motorists—making manufacturing processes more certain—producing a higher standard of quality—25 years of unswerving adherence to the Firestone pledge, "Most Miles per Dollar"—summarizes Firestone's record of service to car owners.

Firestone factories have grown from a small building approximately 75 x 150 feet to mammoth plants having floor area of over 60 acres—from a capital of $50,000 to over $50,000,000—from an annual sales volume of $100,000 to over $100,000,000—all in the short period of 25 years.

This Firestone record could only have been made through furnishing the public with outstanding values and is, consequently, your assurance of quality and lowest prices.

If you would like to know more of this wonderful record, ask your Firestone dealer to send you an illustrated folder.

With today's high cost of crude rubber and other raw materials, Firestone's opportunity to serve the public was never better, due to its great volume and special advantages in buying, manufacturing and distribution.
